Nixon Asks Bunker to Retain Vietnam Post, Completes State Department Team

NEW YORK (AP) — President-elect Nixon rounded out his top level team for the State Department Saturday, picking an administrator and two career diplomats. He also said he wants Ambassador Ellsworth Bunker to stay on for a time in Vietnam.

Nixon confirmed his choice for the No. 2 job in the State Department: Massachusetts Atty. Gen. Elliott L. Richardson, 48, a man who, like Secretary of State-designate William P. Rogers, has little foreign policy experience.

The president-elect said Richardson has demonstrated "an immense capability as an administrator" and has "a broad interest in foreign policy."

Rogers said Richardson, as undersecretary of state, will be his "alter ego" and as such will be involved in all foreign policy. The president-elect picked U. Alexis Johnson, 60, now ambassador to Japan, as undersecretary of state for political affairs, and Richard F. Pedersen, 43, a deputy U.S. representative at the United Nations Security Council, to be counselor at the State Department.

Ambassador Johnson will return to Japan, Nixon said, then stop off in Vietnam on returning to the U.S. to confer with Bunker, to see if he will stay on.

"We believe that at this time a change in ambassadors would not be wise," the president-elect told a news conference at the Hotel Pierre.

Nixon did not say how long he wants Bunker to stay on the job in Saigon. He said the decision to ask him to remain was made Saturday morning. A Nixon source said later that Bunker had not been asked yet if he will stay on.

The president-elect also said that "at the appropriate time" he would have a statement on the peace negotiating team in Paris.

Nixon said the State Department men were picked by Rogers, an attorney general in the Eisenhower Administration. He said he "completely shared" Rogers' evaluation of the men.

They constitute, he said, "the right blend" of new blood, like Rogers and Richardson, with the diplomatic experience found in Johnson and Pedersen.

Eisenhower Aide Richardson was a U.S. attorney for Massachusetts when Rogers was U.S. attorney general. He was an assistant secretary of health, education and welfare under former President Dwight D. Eisenhower.

"Mr. Richardson," Nixon said in a statement, "will be the second in command of the State Department and acting secretary during any absences of the secretary."

"He will also carry a major responsibility on behalf of the secretary and myself in giving foreign policy guidance to other departments of the government and in assuring over-all direction, coordination and supervision of all inter-departmental activities overseas."

Ambassador Johnson, who played a major role in working out the 1953 Korean armistice when he was deputy assistant secretary for Far Eastern affairs, will be the No. 3 man at State.

Johnson will be responsible for over-all coordination of the geographical and functional bureaus of the State Department in putting together policy recommendations. He'll also be responsible for seeing that policy decisions are carried out.

Rebels Flee to Brazil Uprising Attempt Being Put Down in Guyana

GEORGETOWN, Guyana (AP) — Guyana troops are putting down a rancher and Indian uprising in far southern Guyana and forcing the rebels to flee into Brazil, government spokesmen said Saturday.

And in neighboring Venezuela, a female rebel spokesman said Venezuelan refusal to grant military aid to the insurgents probably has marked the end of the three-day rebellion in which she said 14 persons have died.

The woman, Valerie Hart, described herself as an official of the secessionist government of Essequibo State. She said in Caracas she had appealed to Venezuela's foreign and interior ministers for troops and weapons but was told "they could not intervene because of international policy" although Venezuela has had border disputes with Guyana.

Strategic Points

Government sources in Georgetown said Guyana defense force troops flown to the rangeland area had regained control of most strategic points. Rebel troops were crossing into Brazil near a point where the two countries and Venezuela meet, the sources said.

They said one stronghold for the rebels remained, the Pirara ranch, said to be a base for supplies flown in from unofficial backers in Venezuela.

The ranch lies some 50 miles from the cattle town of Lethem, where troops and rebels battled Friday. The troops captured the town, some 300 miles southwest of Georgetown after throwing the rebels out of police post with the help of flame throwers.

Guyana's official figure for the death toll, five police and one civilian, was lower than Mrs. Hart's.

Prime Minister Forbes Burnham said Friday that "certain elements in Venezuela" were mixed up in the rebellion.

The hard-core rebels were described as mostly descendants of European ranchowners who had been trying to organize Indians in the area and other white settlers' sons. Government spokesmen said most of the Indians in the area had not backed the revolt and had fled or hidden themselves when the shooting began.

The cattlemen apparently organized the revolt because they feared losing leased grazing land, sources said.

Nixon Surprises Dirksen at Party

STERLING, Va. (AP) — President-elect Nixon was a surprise guest Saturday night at Sen. Everett M. Dirksen's 73rd birthday party.

The president-elect and his wife flew from New York to Dulles International Airport and drove in a motorcade to Dirksen's home in this small town near Leesburg.

The visit was described as a surprise call on Dirksen, a Senate Republican leader from Illinois.

Year of the Moon Busy on Pad, in Congress

CAPE KENNEDY, Fla. (AP) — The space agency's crystal ball for 1969 shows a busy year on the launch pads, on the moon and in the halls of Congress fighting for funds to continue a strong space effort beyond the lunar landing.

Looking ahead to the next 12 months, National Aeronautics and Space Administration officials privately express greater confidence in their ability to land men on the moon than in their ability to rally support for significant future projects.

Budget pressures remain heavy. The Vietnam war and domestic programs demand funds that might otherwise go into space research, and space agency planners are closely watching for clues to how space will fare with a Nixon administration and a new Congress.

Russian Advantage

Without sufficient funds, officials fear America's technological edge will be dulled and Russia will succeed in its race to be the first to colonize the moon and planets.

America could accomplish two or three manned lunar landings this year. But funds do not exist to produce the know-how and hardware to set up a permanent base on the moon.

NASA is preparing, meanwhile, to fly men in earth-orbiting workshops for up to 56 days beginning in 1971.

The first three-man Apollo flight this year is scheduled as a 10-day earth orbit mission beginning Feb. 28. Piloted by Air Force Lt. Col. James A. McDivitt and David R. Scott and civilian astronaut Russell L. Schweickart, the mission will be the first manned test of the type craft that will taxi future astronauts from a three-man Apollo ship in lunar orbit to the moon's surface.

Landing Legs

Called a Lunar Module, the craft is equipped with four landing legs and will ride into space aboard the same Saturn 5 rocket that launches the main Apollo ship.

Another important test of the Lunar Module is scheduled on Apollo 10 in mid-May when Air Force Col. Thomas P. Stafford and Navy Cmdrs. Eugene A. Cernan and John W. Young take the craft into orbit around the moon. Stafford and Cernan are to fly the vehicle within 10 miles of the lunar surface, but not land, then rendezvous with Young in the mother ship.

The first lunar landing is now expected in mid-July with Apollo 11. Astronauts for that mission have not been assigned.

The Lunar Module assigned to Apollo 10 in May is overweight and unable to land. Officials said NASA could decide to leapfrog that lunar orbit mission altogether if all went well on Apollo 9 and accomplish a landing in June with Apollo 11.

NASA, in 1968, launched fewer unmanned satellites than the Soviet Union for the first time in 11 years. The present space agency rate of about two unmanned launches per month is expected to remain steady in 1969.

In mid-February and early April, Mariner spacecrafts bearing television cameras are to be launched for flybys of the planet Mars in the summer of 1969. Their cameras are expected to show surface features as small as 900 feet across—considerably smaller than the 1,200-foot Hoover Dam in Nevada. The best pictures made by previous Mariner craft show no details smaller than three miles across.

Scattered throughout the year will be launches of an Orbiting Solar Observatory, a pioneer interplanetary satellite, weather and communications satellites and an Orbiting Astronomical Observatory.

In late March or early April, a monkey is to make a 30-day Earth orbit trip inside a tiny capsule to see what effects weightlessness will have over this long period.

Western Diplomatic Thought Palestine Guerrillas Blamed For Keeping Unrest Brewing

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Western diplomats believe a prime threat to Middle East peace is the Palestinian guerrilla movement. They say it is aimed at goading Israel into reprisals against its Arab neighbors.

Owing loyalty to no Arab government, the five main guerrilla groups have fanned the flames of Palestinian nationalism and given back identity to hundreds of thousands of Palestinian exiles.

Western diplomats call the commandos the "rogue elephant factor" in the Middle East crisis. Unpredictable and unmanageable, their actions could wreck any new peace initiative.

Incite Retaliation

The avowed aim of the guerrilla groups is to incite Israeli retaliation against the Arab states, even if it means a new Middle East war, the diplomats say.

Judging from the Israeli raid on Beirut International airport one week ago, they seem to be succeeding in sparking reprisals. Israel claimed that the two men who attacked the Israeli jetliner at Athens airport, killed an Israeli passenger, came from Lebanon.

Al Fatah, largest and generally regarded as the most dangerous of the Palestinian movements, marked its fifth birthday this week with an announcement reporting on its operations since Jan. 1, 1965.

Al Fatah Raids

Fatah claimed that its partisans have raided 140 Israeli settlements, killing or wounding 3,700 Israeli soldiers with a loss of only 359 guerrillas. Such claims are viewed with skepticism, even in the Arab world, but the guerrilla operations are causing mounting concern in Israel.

Al Fatah and the four other main partisan groups each operate largely independently. Most have headquarters in Jordan with camps scattered among Jordan's tawny hills. Partisan claims that their main bases are located in Israeli-occupied territory are discounted.

The total strength of the movement as a whole is estimated at between 5,000 and 20,000 men, but probably only about 5,000 of these are under arms.

Money Flows

There is no shortage either of recruits or funds, money flows in from oil-rich Kuwait, Saudi Arabia and the Persian Gulf states. The weapons, mostly of Soviet and Chinese origin, range from sub-machine guns to rockets.

The Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO), created in 1964 by an Arab summit conference in Cairo is the oldest of the exiled Palestinian groups.

It was originally meant to constitute a Palestine government in exile and its guerrilla operations began only after the June War of 1967.

At its headquarters in Amman, PLO president Yachia Ma'mouneh describes the guerrilla campaign as a "war of liberation."

"We will continue fighting and reject any settlement that attempts to liquidate the Palestinian cause," he says.

Eliminate Israel

Like the other groups, the PLO is fighting to eliminate the state of Israel. Jews living there before 1948, when Israel was founded, would be permitted to remain under an Arab government. The rest would be thrown out.

Hamoudeh took over as PLO president from fiery-tongued Ahmed Shukairy, who vowed to sweep all Israelis into the sea but retired to a Beirut hotel at the outbreak of the 1967 Arab-Israeli war. Many PLO members

Move by Saigon Not Explained

PARIS (AP) — Allied sources said Saturday night the Saigon government has ordered the recall of Vice President Nguyen Cao Ky's entire staff from the Paris peace talks.

There had been speculation among diplomats in Paris that the political future of the 38-year-old vice president was uncertain, but there has been nothing from Saigon to bear this out.

Ky is a political rival of President Nguyen Van Thieu but they are reported to have papered over their differences in order to present a united front in Paris.

There was no immediate explanation as to the reasons for the recall of the more than 20 members of Ky's personal staff.

Nor was it clear if Ky himself or Thieu had issued the orders for their recall.

Options on Villas

The South Vietnamese mission here is maintaining until the end of January options to lease two villas in the Geneva area. They were selected last week as headquarters for Ky and his entourage if the vice president returned to Europe.

Ky arrived in Paris Dec. 8 as special director and counselor of South Vietnam's delegation to the Paris parley.

He left after two weeks nominally for consultations with Thieu. He has recently been nursing a bronchial condition in a resort outside Saigon.

Ambassador Pham Dang Lam, a former foreign minister, is officially leader of Saigon's delegation at the peace talks and would speak for his government if and when the conference begins.

Three Leaving

Informants said arrangements already have been made for three members of Ky's staff to fly home about Jan. 9. They are identified as special political adviser Col. Dao Huy Ngoc; special assistant Nguyen Thien Nhon; and speechwriter Col. Vu Duc Vinh.

The informants said arrangements are being made for the departure of the remaining 20 or so members of the vice-president's staff who are affected by the recall order.

In a related development also reported by the informants, South Vietnamese Premier Tran Van Huong has cabled orders authorizing four out of 12 members of the Vietnamese Press Agency staff to stay on in Paris. The 12, selected by Ky's staff to accompany the vice president on his mission, left Saigon without getting the required governmental okay. As a result, they were discharged and ordered back to Saigon. But now Huong has reprieved four presumably on grounds their services here are in the government's interests.

Big Four Could Meet Anywhere, U.N. Chief Says

UNITED NATIONS, (AP) — U.N. Secretary-General U Thant said Saturday that if the Big Four agreed to confer about a settlement in the Middle East, they could "meet anywhere, even in the Security Council."

"It is, however, important," he went on, "that they try to find a solution within the framework of the Security Council resolution of Nov. 22, 1967, and through support for the efforts of the special representative, Ambassador Jarring."

Swedish Ambassador Gunnar Jarring is Thant's special representative to seek a settlement under that resolution, which calls for Israeli withdrawal from occupied Arab territories and Arab recognition of secure boundaries for Israel.

Resent Initiatives

Thant was questioned by a reporter as he came to work for elaboration on his statement welcoming "recent initiatives" for a meeting on the Middle East among the Soviet Union, the United States, Britain and France.

His statement had been taken as an endorsement of a reported Soviet proposal for such a meeting. But he told the reporter he did not know of any such proposal. He said that by "recent initiatives" he meant statements made lately by Pope Paul VI and by the December president of the Security Council, Ethiopian Ambassador Endalkachew Makonnen.

"To the best of my knowledge," Thant said, "France initiated the idea in 1967 and I took it up in my letter to the foreign ministers of the Big Four in October last year."

"Even now I do not know that the Soviet Union has endorsed the idea of a four-power meeting, although of course I know that they are reported to be in contact with the governments of the other three of the Big Four."

Blackness Does Exist

The Post-Crescent presents today in View Magazine the viewpoint of the only black faculty member at Oshkosh State University on the background of the tragic events which occurred on that campus Nov. 21. He is James W. McKee, director of Programs for Culturally Distinct Groups at the university.

We have gathered two main observations from Mr. McKee's article.

The first is that progress was being made at the university in meeting the demands of the black students for an Afro-American Center, for more black faculty members and for more black courses in the curriculum. This is what makes the events of Nov. 21 and the subsequent expulsion of 90 black students so tragic. The administration and the faculty of Oshkosh State University were responding to the demands (we wish most heartily they had labelled them requests), even though the students may have felt the response was too lethargic.

In this respect Mr. McKee indicts his own black students for injudicious impatience.

But the strongest appeal the faculty member makes to understanding, and this is our second observation, is that this was a totally new experience for the university and for the community of Oshkosh, and the administration, in attempting to treat all students alike, actually was treating black students as white students.

If we are ever to get to the roots of racial prejudice we must face up to the fact that people with black skins look different than people with white skins, that they have been treated differently during the long and painful history of black people in this country, that the thinking of black people has been affected by this treatment, and that therefore the thinking of black people may be different from that of white people.

We have pointed out before that the situation facing these black students at Oshkosh State was a difficult one, that in addition to making the considerable adjustments which any student must make when he goes away to college, these students faced the adjustment of enrolling in a predominantly white university and living in an all-white community.

We hope that Mr. McKee's article will contribute toward a renewal of Oshkosh State University's program for culturally distinct groups and that it will contribute toward an understanding on the part of the university and the community that they are culturally distinct.

The New Legislature

The 79th regular session of the Wisconsin State Legislature will convene in Madison soon. Its newly elected members, numbering 26 in the two houses, will take their oaths of office on Monday when the other constitutional officers elected last November will also be sworn in at traditionally sparse and simple ceremonies at the state capitol. The legislators will then go into recess, to permit committees to function and to allow members time for the preparation of bills and resolutions, in anticipation of the first regular deliberations of the new term starting on January 21.

In its political composition, the legislature may present a curious appearance to those who are familiar with the political history of the institution. In spite of generally decisive Republican electoral majorities in this state last fall, as in the re-election of Gov. Knowles and the rest of the Republican slate, there will be a modest, and perhaps hazardedly thin, Republican margin of control by only two votes in the state assembly. As if to underline their selective intentions, the people at the same time last fall increased the already substantial margin of Republican authority in the state senate, where the administration party will have a towering 23 to 10 vote lead over the Democrats.

Traditionally, the legislature receives generous numbers of bills and resolutions, even in such times as these when the major and obvious issues for resolution are not numerous to the naked eye.

Thus we may expect a session of seven to eight months in duration, in all probability, if the 2,000 to 3,000 propositions ordinarily offered are filed for consideration, as we have no doubt they will. Wisconsin legislative rules lean strongly toward the liberal democratic idea, with generous provision of debate, hearings and publicity, which tends to extend deliberations over a considerably longer period than in those states which arbitrarily limit the duration of their legislative sessions. Although there is sometimes a tendency to wish that our own representatives would perform their tasks more expeditiously, we are convinced, on balance, that careful legislation and the most extensive public participation possible is preferable to brevity of sessions for the mere sake of brevity.

The major problem before our representatives in Madison requires little explanation. It has been evident for months, in the debates on the campaign trail last summer and fall, in the budget hearing proceedings of the governor, and in the simple arithmetic of a 54 per cent increase in appropriation requests over the present level of state disbursement which in turn is at a record high in the experience of the state.

That some budget request pruning is in order is obvious. And before they conclude their work, the governor and the legislature will find that some new tax measures are needed is also reasonably evident.

For the most part the majority party in the legislature will be led by seasoned men. Gov. Knowles, as head of the executive department, has been directly involved in state government for a quarter of a century. The Democratic minority can be expected to be vigilant and contains some able and experienced men to take on the necessary job of auditing and challenging the majority. It may be a quarrelsome and lengthy session, but there is no reason why it cannot be a fruitful one.

Another Synod of Bishops

Roman Catholics who have been advocating change in their denomination received encouraging news when Pope Paul VI announced on Christmas Eve that his synod of bishops will hold its second meeting in October. The synod was created after Vatican Council II to assist the Pope in governing the Catholic Church.

The first session of the synod dealt with topics including mixed marriages, canon law, liturgy, seminaries and doctrine when it met in the fall of 1967. But significantly, it was forbidden to discuss the subject of birth control. The following summer was marked by the release of the encyclical Humanae Vitae, whose pronouncement on birth control started a reaction in the Catholic Church which has not yet stopped. Some bishops have found it hard to endorse the encyclical, leading to many Catholics accepting the Pope's pronouncement as a recommendation rather than a decree which must be followed.

Whether the synod will be able to break the hold which conservative Italian cardinals seem to have on the Pope is an important question. A few years ago the idea of collegiality was being proposed as a means of bringing change in an ordered and gradual way to the church. Collegiality has its roots in the early Christian practice of calling councils of bishops to decide important questions in doctrine and practice. Vatican II was an implementation of this idea under Pope John XXIII, although it was restricted to Roman Catholics. It emphasized the bishops as a "college" of churchmen who were assembled to advise the Pope.

The synod is a smaller group than the council and this may be an advantage. Vatican II unleashed both desire for change and fervor for keeping the old ways. The Pope appears to be leaning toward the status quo, since he is trying to maintain unity. The synod can perform a great service to its fellow bishops by giving the pontiff an accurate picture of how great the need for change is among those Christians who are under the spiritual jurisdiction of Rome. It is information which Pope Paul must have and seriously consider if the church unity he prizes so highly is to be a reality.

Lesson From the Pueblo Is That Asian Communists Are Sadists

BY WILLIAM F. BUCKLEY

Commander Bucher, we all now know, was told to perform an act of disloyalty to his country, or to preside over the liquidation of all the members of the Pueblo's crew, one at a time; one each day. The commander replied heroically — let the Communists shoot him first, and thus relieve him of the responsibility of either betraying his country or effecting the murder of his command. No, said the North Koreans. Whereupon Commander Bucher signed the treaty.

The United States Government, presented with the document and no doubt exhausted by the failures of conventional diplomacy, yielded to the blackmail and "apologized" to the Pueblo's transgression.

I note the fate of Anthony Grey, an English journalist. You will remember that about 15 years ago the British carefully explained to us that they were recognizing the government of Red China on the grounds that you cannot ignore a billion people and anyway it is important to have available to a government the diplomatic channels through which to transact necessary business. It is interesting how smoothly the United States is able to negotiate the release of our hijacked airplanes in Havana notwithstanding that we have no representatives in that country, which we do not recognize diplomatically. By contract, the English have had no success at all in attempting to achieve the release of Anthony Grey.

PUT IN HOUSE ARREST

What did Mr. Grey do? Nothing, nothing at all. But he was put in house arrest 17 months ago in retaliation for the arrest during the Hong Kong riots of left-journalists who had defied emergency regulations.

"House arrest" describes the situation of Anthony Grey about the way that "involuntary detention" would describe Buchenwald. His "house" is a single room smaller than the death cell in the Trenton Penitentiary. He is permitted one letter a month from his mother and one from his girl, and these are left tantalizingly undelivered for days within his view. His extensive library upstairs is largely unavailable to him because his guards require him exactly to render the title of the book he desires, e. g., if you ask for "Wedemeyer Reports" by General A. C. Wedemeyer they tell you they have no such book, because in fact it is called "Wedemeyer Reports!"

The imprisoned Hong Kong leftists were released ages ago, but never mind, there are now 13 other Communists who have been arrested for breaking the law. Hong Kong refuses to release them, and presumably that decision was reached in Whitehall for the obvious reason. If the British release the prisoners in order to release Anthony Grey (and those are Peking's terms), then they might as well grant permanent immunity to any Hong Kong rioter. Because there will always be an Anthony Grey around for Peking to torture.

The government of the United States quickly released the terms of its dilemma. And, no doubt, the knowing world was disposed to believe Washington. Even so there was damage done. Even if every single human being in the world accepted it as an article of faith that the Pueblo had done nothing illegal, every person in the world knows that the United States Government was required to do something that it most deeply desired not to do. And the humbling of great powers is an exercise to which lesser powers are greatly tempted. Commander Bucher and Anthony Grey are mighty instruments of their tormentors, for whom the value of face exactly complements the ignominy of humiliation.

DEALING WITH SADISTS

Commander Bucher was right to do what he did: his conduct, from all we know of it, was exemplary. The United States Government was wrong. The British Government, so naive in its faith that recognition of Red China would bring on diplomatic amenities, is right in declining the terms of Anthony Grey's release. Through it all we need to keep reminding ourselves that we are dealing not merely with unscrupulous merchants of power, but with sadists.

The treatment of Bucher et al was unrelated to the goal of extracting the confession from the commander. He signed that paper not because he had been beaten, but because he chose not to permit his companions to be executed. What is the reason for failing to hand over to Anthony Grey his letter from his mother when it arrives? But they are not masochists. Gaud, I hope Nixon knows that.

Here's Sad Tale of A Christmas Puppy

Editor, The Post-Crescent:

I guess it all started before Peppermint Prince was even born. A mother of four boys decided they should have a pet. Being self-supporting, she saved her pennies to get Peppermint Prince, a toy poodle, and awaited his birth. He came and she got him when he was weaned. You never saw one toy poodle so well loved and taken care of. For some reason, which may be none of us will understand, Peppermint Prince got outside without anyone knowing. This happened on Dec. 18th, 1968. He was killed by an unknown motorist and was picked up by the sanitation department without the owner even knowing this. By the time she missed him the Sanitation Department had already had him. A good friend of hers identified Peppermint Prince. She had to tell the boys. I was there. The sadness in the house was unbelievable as the boys cried so hard and so did mother. Being the kind of person I am, I figured the only thing that would help would be another puppy. So I took it upon myself that maybe with a little help from the good Lord and a lot of good people we could find another puppy. We did. A few uncles and aunts and two friends scraped our pocket books and we found Tinker Bell, a very cute toy poodle.

My oldest sister and I took Tinker Bell to this sad house where there was no dog for four boys. I wish you could have been there as we took Tinker Bell out of our pocket to show these four boys, the tears rolled down their cheeks, tears of happiness, down the mother's face and yes, mine too. As Mark, age 10, said, "This was the best Christmas gift anyone could give us." Again the family was happy for they had Tinker Bell.

Tinker Bell died of pneumonia the 27th of Dec., 1968. Now I ask why? Why was another so well loved puppy taken from these four boys when they had so much love to give him? And a good home. Was Tinker Bell only a Christmas gift? He must have been special for he only stayed for Christmas. Now we have empty pocket books and no puppy for four boys. The people who sold us Tinker Bell said he was healthy, then why did he die 9 days after we got him. How many times have asked myself this tonight. Why did both dogs die within nine days of each other. Maybe God has the answer. I don't.

Teacher in Little Red Schoolhouse Wouldn't Want Those Days Now

Editor, The Post-Crescent:

I was once a teacher in a Little Red Schoolhouse many years ago. In those days I arrived to build a fire in the pot-bellied stove, cold and miserable for teacher and students; most arrived with frozen lunches, runny noses and with frost bitten feet and fingers.

Yes, we turned out a few good ones, but as one teacher for eight grades, I can assure you that none could have been a mathematical genius, since I myself did not know the subject well enough to teach adequately. Those who mastered it were able to do so in their own right by reading. Yes and even then a newspaper subscription was costly.

Of course, in those days we

No One on Staff Wants To Travel in Winter, So No Free Columns

BY JOHN TORINUS

Editor, The Post-Crescent

It's the season for New Year's resolutions, but I have found there are diminishing results to be accomplished from such mental gymnastics as one proceeds further along the road of life. This is undoubtedly the result of a good deal of rationalizing, or it could be just mental ennui.

Torinus

In lieu of resolutions intended to last out the year I did this week spur myself, however, to write just one Sunday column of my own. This space has been taken over, you may have noted, for a series of weeks by various other members of the editorial staff of this newspaper.

This was the direct result of the generosity of this editor in dispatching various staff members to various places around the country, M. E. Gordon McIntyre to the AP Managing Editors' meeting, John Wyngaard to the governors' conference in Palm Springs, and son John to Washington. Their column contributions were intended, I am sure, as a favor for that generosity, and it certainly paid off.

But in these last few weeks no one on the staff has wanted to go anywhere, or volunteered, what with the air and train schedules completely disrupted and the roads rendered treacherous if not impassable. As I passed Plantz Hall on the Lawrence Campus there was a placard in one window, "Let's Stamp Out Summer." So at least one local resident is having his wish come true.

It struck me this week that the custom of wishing friends and neighbors and relations a "Happy New Year" sometimes becomes a very meaningful gesture. At a New Year's Eve party I remarked to several companions that I would be very content if 1969 turned out to be as good a year as 1968 had been, from a personal standpoint that is.

I was just about to make the same remark to an old partridge hunting friend when I stopped in the middle of the sentence, for this man of my age had suffered a very serious heart attack midway during the last year.

He defined the meaning of the rest of the sentence I had left unsaid, and he enthusiastically agreed with me. For this friend has recovered remarkably from the attack, and with an entirely new outlook on what is important in life. He had been given the opportunity of casting a brief glance into the beyond and then had been welcomed back into the society of living beings, and he is most grateful for the experience.

Christmas Eve was a most frustrating experience for me this year. Our family is now grown to adulthood, but this is the first holiday season when the full meaning of that fact bore down on me.

I arrived home early on Christmas Eve afternoon, full finally with the Christmas spirit (and I mean figuratively rather than literally) and volunteered for any last-minute tasks which were at hand.

It seemed that there was nothing left to be done. The tree was up and decorated. The outside decorations were completed the weekend before. All the presents were wrapped and placed under the tree. The Christmas cookies had even been decorated.

Our youngest son needed new skis for Christmas, but Santa had to deliver them early because what with all this snow this December he wanted to use them several weekends early. That meant there wasn't a single major present to be hidden away until after the kiddies were in bed.

But the greatest blow of all was that there was nothing to put together this year, no baby doll carriages or bicycles or games. I fancy myself an amateur handyman and really do enjoy mechanical puzzles.

So I spent Christmas Eve sitting in my chair and gazing at the tree and reading the newspaper and doing exactly the same things I do on any other relaxing evening at home. And finally I went to bed around 11 p.m.

But it was a wonderful Christmas morning. Five of our six children were home, three with their wives and one with the first grandchild, and daughter Laurie called all the way from Belfast, Ireland.

And I wound up with something to put together. One of my presents to the good wife was a golf cart, and the manufacturer had very thoughtfully not attached the seat which was an extra accessory. I had to take out one bolt and replace it with a longer one and affix the seat to the cart, a feat which my sons earlier had failed to figure out.

Heard the New Carol? It's 'Buy, Buy, Buy'

Editor, The Post-Crescent:

As I walked down the snow-laden street, the spirit of Christmas hit me - what would I get this year? Maybe an expensive Swiss-made electric calendar watch with dual second hands and gold-lined numerals. Or maybe a set of white goldfish hide luggage with built in cigarette lighter, radio, clock, and ice cube crusher to use with the portable bar that comes with it. Yes, the spirit of Christmas had hit me!

The surroundings helped me to arrive at the spirit. The artificial pink snow was lying on the revolving sidewalk, and more was falling from the multi-purpose moisture maker which hovered over the store which I was entering. There was a feeling of warmth which surrounded me from all the people that were stampeding down the aisles. It's a good thing that I'm physically fit, because only the fittest survive the five month Christmas holiday season. It is also a good thing that I'm wearing my all-occasion deodorant plus breath purifier. After all, I wouldn't want to offend myself. It was nice to see all the cold sparkling eyes cutting out through everyone's expressionless faces. It was evident that everyone was thinking like me in the Christmas spirit.

The store was beautiful on the interior. There were aluminum Christmas trees in every corner, decorated with bright packages with signs on them, like "Show her how much she's worth to you: buy her a purple mink trimmed with tiger snake fur. Then she might give you something expensive."

I can still remember the day that they put up the Christmas decorations in the streets. I can vividly recall the sweet incantations that issued from the mouths of the workers as they pricked their fingers on the decorations, &!!&!! Such music to the ears. And how pretty those decorations looked once they were up - bright green 200 dollar bills with a picture of Hugh Hefner III in the center, flanked by bunnies and Santa and Mrs. Claus, dressed in creations of Mr. Hefner. How beautiful they looked that first day, contrasted against the hot July sky.

I couldn't find what I wanted, so I left the store. Overhead was a loudspeaker shouting the music of Christmas. Ravi Clapton was singing his newest Christmas song, "Buy, Buy, Buy." To add to the Christmas spirit, all the stores were allowing anyone to charge a new credit card in order to charge more merchandise. The air was warmed nicely by the artificial sun, so I thought I'd ride home on the sidewalk.

Suddenly I heard laughter down a side street. Gee, someone must have gotten hurt, so I had to see the action. I was right. I could hardly control my laughter. Laying on the ground was a white haired old lady. The multi-purpose moisture maker had malfunctioned and ejected a large hunk of artificial hail that had hit her. She was close to 80, a real novelty, because no one lived past 30 anymore since they increased the tar and nicotine content in our new 203 millimeter cigarettes with built in cough silencers. She had often amused groups of us by telling us of the times when she was small; about how everyone loved each other, and how it was the thought that counted. Boy, what an imagination! In her hand was a brown paper bag. It was ripped. From out of nowhere came a breeze which blew back part of the bag. Something strange to my eyes was exposed, yet they seemed familiar. There was a small primitive structure with small pieces of straw laying around it. There was also a statue of a man in long flowing garments with a crown on his head, and he was seated on a camel. Another statue was next to this one. A man dressed in the same way as the other statue was standing with a staff in his hand, with a sheep by his legs. Two more figures, one a man and one a woman, were in a kneeling position, the woman was dressed in light blue. But what's that? There, lying on the ground a few feet from myself was a statue of a small child in a bed of straw - What was it the old lady had said about them. . .

U.N. Actions Appear To be Anti-Semitic

Editor, The Post-Crescent:

In early summer, 1967, armies of five Arab nations massed on the borders of Israel. These nations, backed by Russia and China, had a combined land area of 672,931 square miles and approximate populations of 44,300,000, compared with a land area of 7,993 square miles and an approximate population of 2,700,000 in Israel, which stood alone. Taking what was obviously their only chance for survival, the Israelis struck first. The U. N. solemnly condemned the Jewish "aggressors."

Over the past year and a half the Soviets have poured vast tonnages of war-making equipment into the world-be world powers of Islam, building them far past their former military strength. But when the U. S. accepted Israeli's offer to buy 50 warplanes, the U. N. member nations suddenly came to life loudly and bitterly. The sale was almost unanimously labeled a warlike and dangerous step toward igniting new conflict.

Also over the past year and a half Arab terrorists have disrupted the Israeli home front with a vicious campaign of sabotage and murder. Where were the pious condemnations of these acts and of others such as the machine gunning an El Al airliner at Athens airport? There were none. But when the Israelis raided in reprisal a Lebanese airfield (aircraft were carefully cleared of occupants before destruction) unanimous condemnation came again, accompanied by demands for reparations. (The unusually loud British protest was no doubt connected with the loss of three million dollars by Lloyd's of London.)

Why does the U. N. ignore the Arab contention that they will not rest until Israel is wiped from the map?

It's hard to tell which is the problem here. Does the U. N. simply fear to oppose any but those from whom the member nations have little to fear? Or could it be that national level anti-semitism did not die with Nazi Germany? Either way, it's not a pretty picture.

Tax Were Lower Too In Log Cabin Days

Editor, The Post-Crescent:

To those who believe education should return to the "Little Red School House" days, I was a teacher in one of those one room school houses, with one year of education beyond high school, was paid $11.11 a month for nine months with the stipulation that the teacher was responsible for all the janitorial duties. Heaven forbid that our children should have to go back to such an "education!" We, who taught in one room schools were not "dedicated teachers who stayed in one room to keep expenses down" as R. C. D. of Kaukauna says. If there was any dedication involved, it was to save our money and go back to college so we could qualify to teach in a "better system."

Perhaps those who believe in the "one room school" type of education would prove their sincerity by themselves going back to the "log cabin days" type of living, with all the stimulating duties of carrying in wood and water, not to mention outdoor bathroom facilities. This would no doubt lower their real estate taxes, which seems to be what those who oppose a new elementary school in Kaukauna are concerned with.

'Diminished Responsibility' May be Defense

Will Technicality 'Save' Sirhan?

By RALPH DIGHTON

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Sirhan Bishara Sirhan goes to trial Tuesday, Jan. 7, on a charge of murdering Sen Robert F. Kennedy—and a quirk in California law could save him from the gas chamber if he is found guilty.

The quirk is a hair-splitting technicality, reinforced by several decisions since 1949 but little known outside California, which recognizes a person may be legally sane yet still not fully responsible for his actions.

A number of legal and psychiatric authorities believe the 24-year-old Jordanian's counsel might use a defense known as "diminished responsibility" to seek a verdict short of first-degree murder and a lesser penalty than death.

Presentation of evidence by both sides is expected to take two months or longer. There are indications that more than 200 witnesses will be called.

Some are expected to say that Sirhan waited in a kitchen area of the Ambassador Hotel early last June 5 as Kennedy announced to a gathering of his supporters that he had won the California Democratic presidential primary.

Then, the prosecution will attempt to show, Sirhan began blazing away with a small-caliber pistol as Kennedy and others passed by.

Kennedy and five bystanders were wounded. The senator died later in a hospital.

The setting of the trial is Superior Court Department 107, an eighth-floor courtroom in the Civic Center's 43-year-old gray stone Hall of Justice.

Quarter-inch steel plates have been placed inside the courtroom's four windows—a precaution taken also for pre-trial hearings on the 13th floor, where Sirhan is held under heavy guard.

Hand Picked

Occupying the courtroom's 75 spectator seats will be a hand-picked squad of sheriff's officers, witnesses and newsmen. Although 114 reports have been given credentials to cover the trial, there will be space in the courtroom for only 37. The others will observe by closed circuit television in a room four floors below. Most of the reporters are American, but some are from Egypt, Australia, Canada, England, France, Germany, Mexico and Japan.

Also seated in the courtroom will be Sirhan's mother, Mary, and brothers Adel, 29, and Munir, 21, of suburban Pasadena.

The case charged with seeking justice for Sirhan will include:

The presiding jurist, Superior Court Judge Herbert V. Walker, 69, bushy-browed dean of the Los Angeles criminal bench.

The three prosecutors: Lynn "Buck" Compton, 46, pipe-puffing, onetime UCLA football player who won a silver Star medal when he was shipped to France with the 01st Airborne Division at Jorndam. He is the county's chief deputy district attorney. Deputy Dist. Atty. John Howard, husky and spectacled, who joined the prosecutor's office 17 years ago after serving with the infantry in Europe in World War II.

Deputy Dist. Atty. David N. Fitts, 46 and graying, seemingly shy and quiet but is scheduled to do most of the talking in the Sirhan trial. He is a 14-year veteran of the district attorney's office.

Three For Defense

Three for the defense: Russell B. Parsons, 69, wispy, bespectacled lawyer who has tried nearly 5,000 cases in nearly 50 years' practice Parsons, who keeps fit by exercising in the morning and walking two miles each evening, is proudest of his role in the 1954 Charles Cahan case. The California Supreme Court ruled that evidence illegally obtained cannot be used against a defendant in a criminal case.

Grimalt Cooper, 65, former president of the Los Angeles County Bar Association. Like Parsons, he has served in the district attorney's office. His greatest fame is as a criminal defense lawyer the past 20 years.

Emile Zola Berman, 65, of New York City. Burman is best known for his defense of Marine Staff Sgt. Matthew C. McKeon, who was accused of leading 75 recruits from Paris Island, S.C., on a night march into a swamp, where six died. McKeon was convicted of negligent homicide.

The likelihood that Sirhan's attorneys may use the "diminished responsibility" defense arises from the fact that the position has several times won a reduced sentence or even acquittal. In most states, a defendant must be found either sane or insane; in California, he can be held partially insane.

Avenues Open

Interviews with lawyers and psychiatrists show these avenues are open for Sirhan:

1. The defense may offer evidence that the act was not premeditated, which would make it second-degree murder punishable by five years to life in prison.

2. The defense may try to prove that Sirhan's mental capacity was diminished to a point where he was not capable of malice. This would be manslaughter, punishable by up to 15 years in prison.

Diminished responsibility has been claimed in several cases when the defense could not establish legal insanity but could show the person was influenced by rage, fear, obsession, drugs or even alcohol.

Sirhan pleaded not guilty last Aug. 2. Legal authorities pointed out that the plea of innocence did not necessarily mean Sirhan was denying he killed Kennedy. Since he is charged with murder with malice aforethought, the "not guilty" plea could have meant simply that he was denying malice.

Parsons, at a news conference following the plea, said: "I haven't seen any malice yet that he had any malice."

He also said the not guilty plea "permits us to show the what and why—what are the real issues—if he is the man, why did he do it?"

Sets Stage

Parsons himself thus seemed to set the stage for a diminished-capacity defense—which need not be declared prior to the trial.

Paul Caruso, Los Angeles defense attorney not involved in the Sirhan case, says: "The basic question is not whether Sirhan killed, but if he did, why did he do it? It could be that he wasn't killing a man, but killing a symbol. Kennedy had urged military aid for Israel, a country Sirhan hated. Is it murder to kill a symbol? To me, this betrays an obsession which could diminish his mental capacity."

Caruso, in an interview, cited a 1964 case in which a young woman took a pistol to a meeting with a brother-in-law who was her lover. She testified she had no intent to kill, only to force him to listen to her plea that he give up other women. The brother-in-law moved on her menacingly and she fired five quick shots, wounding him severely. The man recovered. The woman was placed on probation.

"The defense showed that she was in a state of diminished capacity through terror," Caruso said, "because she kept on firing when it was no longer necessary. You will recall that Sirhan is accused of doing much the same thing. Sen. Kennedy was struck by three bullets, and five other persons were wounded."

"The more bizarre the case, the more unreasonable the act, the better are the chances of a diminished-capacity defense."

Richard Caballero, onetime assistant district attorney now in private practice, pointed to other potential grounds for a diminished-responsibility defense.

"There was testimony before the grand jury that Sirhan looked like a crazy man the night of the shooting," Caballero said. "There were pictures in the papers and on television showing film wild-eyed. All this might well be used to show a diminished mental state."

Sirhan did not enter a separate plea of not guilty by reason of insanity, although this is permissible under California law.

Sirhan's attorney has told newsmen he has never entered only a single plea of not guilty when psychiatrists have found a client legally insane.

Dr. Seymour Pollock of the University of Southern California has been retained by the prosecution to observe Sirhan, but any conclusions he may have reached have not been disclosed.

Dr. Maurice Walsh, a Beverly Hills psychiatrist, recalled the testimony of a hotel employee who was among the throng celebrating Kennedy's presidential primary victory the night of the shooting. The employee said Sirhan exclaimed, as he was being subdued by a crowd of witnesses: "Let me explain. I can explain."

Felt Justified

"Sirhan apparently felt that his action was justified," Dr. Walsh said in an interview, "and if he did, such an irrational feeling could be interpreted as evidence of diminished capacity."

Dr. Walsh said many assassins have had a hidden paranoia, a mental illness that can erupt violently on occasion although they were known previously as calm and reserved.

"Many persons in all walks of life have a latent personality structure such that others can influence them to commit political assassination," he said. "There is a great need for research to find these people ahead of time, while they are still apparently in good mental health."

The concept of diminished responsibility has been developing in California law since 1949, when the State Supreme Court ruled a trial judge erred in barring psychiatric testimony even though the defendant did not plead insanity.

Since then, testimony by psychiatrists has been a major factor in reducing the verdict in several cases.

Dr. John M. Suarez, assistant professor of psychiatry at the University of California at Los Angeles, said in an interview that the defense of diminished capacity has developed because California courts became dissatisfied with the inflexibility of the rule followed in most states—that a person is either sane or insane, with no shades or gray in between.

He said he is not fully in agreement with the practice, however, because the psychiatrist is frequently put in the position of judging the degree of guilt.

"I believe the psychiatrist should limit himself to describing the defendant's personality and functioning, and leave the decision-making up to the judge and jury," Dr. Suarez said.

Aside from the possibilities offered by the concept of diminished capacity, there is another reason some authorities believe Sirhan never will be executed.

Borderline Case?

If a man is unbalanced enough to kill in full view of a crowd, they say, the stress of confinement and trial might push him over the vague border between sanity and insanity.

Defense attorney Parsons apparently was referring to this last August when he told newsmen: "Suddenly things might develop—people sometimes lose their minds very suddenly."

If this should happen, Sirhan could spend the rest of his days in a mental institution regardless of the verdict.

Attorney Caruso, in summing up the Sirhan case, said: "It looks like a hard one to defend, but it's actually a defense lawyer's dream. Defense counsel can't lose a case—anything short of the gas chamber is a victory."

Teacher and Taxpayer Believes That Quality Education Pays Off

Editor, The Post-Crescent:

During the past few months, some very disturbing letters have been published, concerning the state of education in the City of Appleton. Undoubtedly, these people have written as a result of the tremendous amount of publicity managed by our mayor over the budget. But these letters have gone beyond the point of financial criticism and as a result this writer feels compelled to reply.

The personal attack on the image of our superintendent of schools is repulsive and unwarranted. This man deserves a just compensation for the most difficult job of administering all of the public schools in this city, and this writer knows his present salary is not exaggerated when one considers the decisions, the complaints, the planning and the time that accompanies this position. It is a job that none of the writers to this editorial page could assume, not even our mayor, and do the capable job that is presently being accomplished. This writer has not always had the same viewpoint as the superintendent on different subjects but this writer always received a fair hearing and an explanation of these differences. This same privilege would be extended to anyone who would request it and would correct some of the misunderstandings that appear in the columns of this paper.

The second point that has seeped through in these letters is the idea that salaries were becoming imbalanced with the work load of a 10 month job for the teachers in the Appleton system. People tend to forget that for many years this "profession" suffered from inadequate compensation for the expense of training required. Again, one must admit that not all teachers work a 55 to 60 hour week during these 10 months, with the inclusion of many hours of planning, paper correcting, and meetings; but then, most of the teachers this writer is acquainted with, spend this amount of time to produce "quality" education. With salaries approaching a respectable level, I suppose we must be wary of those that will be in the "profession" primarily for the monetary compensation, but I doubt that this is the case for those interested in the educational field to have suffered through the lean years.

This brings up the third theme in the letters this writer has read in this section of the paper. Education deals with human beings and as such we should talk about people instead of products. This writer has affected the attitudes, values, and ideas of about 4,000 lives during my stay in Appleton. It is with great pride that I mention this since this writer is interested in how these people evolve from the classroom to the life of the citizen. In most cases this has been a most encouraging follow-up for this writer. By checking the Post-Crescent one can see former students emerging as useful citizens and taking their places in the city, county, state, and country. True, some unappreciative students remain that way in life after their educational experience. Their number, however, has not grown in proportion to the same volume of appreciative students. If those writers that felt the "quality" was missing in today's students would check their own dormant memories, they would recall that they also had some unappreciative students in their classes, smaller in number perhaps, because the total number of students was also smaller in number.

If you have read this reply up to this point without putting your paper down, this writer would like to thank you for taking time to listen to the other side.

A teacher, a taxpayer in Appleton for 10 years, and an interested citizen of the City of Appleton.

Phone Lectures Available for Dakota Medics

BISMARCK, N.D. (AP) — It now is possible for doctors in North Dakota hamlets to receive free medical lectures from specialists just by dialing a telephone number.

Doctors in need of some quick medical advice merely make a toll-free long distance call to a 24-hour service operating through the University of Wisconsin and Marquette School of Medicine.

The caller dials the medical library at Madison, Wis., and receives a terse, five to six-minute lecture via prerecorded tapes on the subject that concerns him.

"It's designed primarily for areas that do not have access to good medical libraries or where good consultants are not available," said Dr. C. H. Peters of Bismarck, president of the North Dakota Medical Association.

Shares of Manitowoc Firm Listed

Common shares of Aluminum Specialty Co., Manitowoc — based firm with a Chilton Plant, were among 11 million shares in five companies approved recently for original listing by the American Stock Exchange Board of Governors, bringing the 1968 listing to 146, a modern-day record and compared with 121 a year ago.

Total common shares of Aluminum Specialty approved were 606,011.

The firm, incorporated in 1909 and operating through three divisions, makes a variety of aluminum products, including cookware, toy kitchen sets, rollerskates, parts for home appliances and field cooking equipment and utensils for the armed forces.

It has three Manitowoc plants and one each in Chilton, Menomonee Falls and Burlington.

For the year ending March 31, 1968, it reported net income of $23,762 compared with $270,303 in fiscal 1966.

Wickes Names Manager for New Appleton Lumber Yard

The Wickes Corp., Saginaw, Mich.-based firm with a Forest Junction outlet, has announced the management of the new Appleton outlet at 2401 W. College Ave., which will celebrate its grand opening Wednesday through Saturday.

Names to manage Appleton's Wickes Lumber and Building Supplies Center was Ernest Dinglein, a Hilbert native who joined the company in 1964. Dinglein, former assistant manager in the firm's Eau Claire outlet and more recently manager of the Romeo, Mich., outlet, completed the training program in the Wickes Center, Forest Junction.

His assistant is Winston Sturgen, a Pennsylvania native who joined Wickes in 1968 after eight years in the lumber industry.

The Appleton outlet, geared to serve the do-it-yourself person as well as contractors, was completed in December and since then has been stocked. It includes a showroom of 8,000 square feet and warehouse of 15,000 square feet, plus lumber sheds.

A full line of building supplies, as well as plumbing, heating and electrical supplies, will be offered, Sturgen said. Seven fulltime employees and 12 to 15 part-time help will be used to run the operation, he added.

Wickes has over 200 outlets in the United States and is opening a new store on the average of once every 10 days, Sturgen said.

Economists Don't Expect Credit Dip

Interest Rates Increase to Record Highs

By JACK LEFLER
Ap Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Interest rates are going higher but some economists say they don't expect another credit crunch such as one that gripped the economy in 1966.

Rates for short-term Treasury bills and bankers' acceptances rose to record levels this recently.

These moves followed increases the previous week in the Federal Reserve Board's discount rate — the interest it charges on loans to member banks — and in commercial banks' prime rate — the interest charged to their biggest and most credit-worthy borrowers.

The average rate of return on short-term Treasury bills sold to finance government operations — climbed to record levels. The average rate of return on 13-week bills rose to 6.278 per cent from 5.96 per cent the previous week.

Rates for bankers' acceptances also went to record levels, touching as high as 6 1/2 per cent bid. Acceptances are bills to finance the import, export, transfer or storage of goods. They are deemed accepted when a bank guarantees their payment at maturity.

The current rise in interest rate has aroused apprehension that there could be a repetition of the 1966 credit crunch — a tightening of available lending money. At that time home sales fell as mortgage loan applications were rejected, corporate mergers and acquisitions slowed as financing became less available and unemployment rose as credit for automobile purchases and factory construction dwindled.

"This time economists see a tightening of the money situation but not to the proportions of a crunch."

New Year's Day Wet In Point Arena, Calif.

POINT ARENA, Calif. (AP) — This coastal town of 3,000 got 1969 off to a wet start. Its water works collapsed and 150,000 gallons of water poured down the main street at 1:30 a.m. Wednesday.

A spokesman for the privately owned system said the 30-year-old wooden tank burst under 1.5 million pounds pressure after the lowest metal hoop parted.

Damage from wetting and silting was minor.

Fox Cities area mobile home dealers expect big things in the coming years, in large part because of growing numbers of retired persons turning to mobile home living.

Dealers also have suggested the mobile home or pre-fab home, both produced by the mobile home industry, may be a partial solution to the state's

State Fund Sets Gains Dividend

Directors of Wisconsin Fund Inc., Milwaukee, recently declared a capital gains distribution of 50 cents per share, totaling $2 million, and the result of 12 gains in 1968.

This represents the 30th capital gains distribution since the fund was established in 1924. Harold W. Story, fund president, reported.

Distribution will be Jan. 31, 1969, to shareholders of record Jan. 2, in addition to a 4 cents per share dividend from ordinary income. Payments a year ago were 60 cents per share, or $2.2 million in capital gains and 3 cents per share from ordinary income.

Total dividends declared from 1968 investment income amounted to 16 cents per share, while similar declarations in 1967 totaled 15 cents per share.

Total net assets at Dec. 31, 1968, reached a high for the end of any reporting period. Total net assets increased to $33.0 million compared with $31.5 million at the end of 1967.

need for low-income housing for the elderly.

A State Division of Aging official sees no trend presently but indicated "these (mobile homes) could be practical" in certain cases.

"With HUD (Department of Housing and Urban Development) always looking for new approaches, this could be a challenge to some of your trailer manufacturers," said John Lindoerfer, the aging division's housing consultant.

He said that state and municipal building and zoning regulations now nearly eliminate this possibility but changes are possible.

This package or pre-fab construction possibly could serve this purpose, he added.

Trailer courts are located away from services frequently, he said, and unless a couple had a car, there would be serious inconveniences.

Charles Hill, deputy secretary of the State Department of Local Affairs and Development, said the state is looking to more permanent-type housing.

However, he added: "Mobile homes can be used for temporary relocations (of elderly)." HUD reportedly approves of this practice in extreme circumstances.

Jerome Haen, part owner of Van's Mobile Homes, Appleton, sees a big role for the mobile home industry in providing low-income housing, as do other Fox Cities dealers.

"I think it'd be an excellent idea," he said. "I don't know where an elderly couple could go and buy a home complete with all furnishings, for $5,600 (average Fox Valley cost for a 12 by 60 foot mobile home," he said.

However, he admitted a drawback may be financing.

"Lending companies aren't too keen on financing units for those in their 60s," he said.

Bud Happ, owner of Happ's Mobile Home Sales, Appleton, feels mobile homes for retired "is getting to be something."

He thinks it will zoom upward in a year or two.

Noting many inquiries by couples whose children have grown up, he said that mobile homes eliminate costly and difficult upkeep and maintenance.

"And they lessen the amount of housework," he added.

Happ said that there are many people who buy a home three or four years before they will retire. They keep them on their property until they retire, he said.

But up to now the big boom in mobile home sales has been to young, married couples, he added.

Gerald Hietpas, owner of Hickory Mobile Lane Home Park and Sales, route 1, Kaukauna, thinks mobile home living gives retired much more time for themselves. Upkeep is quicker and easier, he said, noting there is no need for climbing a ladder to put on storm windows.

"It's done from the inside of mobile homes," he said.

Henry Altergott, owner of Circle Acres, Appleton, thinks the Fox Valley is "10 years behind time" in bringing more retired people into mobile home living.

But in the next five years there's going to be more and more of it," he noted.

He said that many retired people have learned of mobile home living from married sons and daughters.

Mrs. Mildred Zimmerman, field consultant for the State Division of Aging, admitted "there could be a call for it" but said there are questions about meeting code standards in gaining federal approval.

To her knowledge there is no HUD funding for permanent mobile housing for the low-income elderly. But private contractors could utilize the services of the mobile home industry, she suggested.

Hill questioned whether HUD would want to subsidize as it normally does — a 40 or 50-year mortgage — since mobile homes do not have near the economic life of a house.

He also pointed to a lack of suitable sites and site planning and inadequate sewer and water and other facilities.

Haen, who also builds homes, indicated many elderly are selling homes in favor of mobile home units. However, he noted some townships are fighting mobile homes locating in their areas, probably because mobile units "aren't taxed very heavy."

Most dealers indicated average lot rental runs about $30 per month, plus $5 to $10 in taxes per month, depending on the township.

After 10 months in 1968, mobile home shipments already had streaked to a yearly record of 265,470, over 25,000 more than the 1967 record, James Redman, president of Mobile Homes Manufacturers Association, Chicago, reported.

Redman pointed to the economy and speedy assembly line production of mobile homes as the reason for their growing popularity.

Final plans on all capital improvements expenditures are incomplete, but efforts will be to permit Soo to produce necessary transportation services reliably and inexpensively to the shipper, he added.

The past year was more in line with growth and profit objectives than 1967, Murray said, but still the business pattern was not normal because of a depressed grain market and lumber strikes.

The Soo continued to upgrade plants and rolling equipment in 1968, spending $30.5 million.

Two 1968 changes in the basic nature of Soo were: Expansion of service in the St. Paul and Roseport, Minn., areas, and eliminating passenger service between Chicago and Calumet, Mich., over the Milwaukee Road and the Soo.

The past year was more in line with growth and profit objectives than 1967, Murray said, but still the business pattern was not normal because of a depressed grain market and lumber strikes.

The Soo continued to upgrade plants and rolling equipment in 1968, spending $30.5 million.

Two 1968 changes in the basic nature of Soo were: Expansion of service in the St. Paul and Roseport, Minn., areas, and eliminating passenger service between Chicago and Calumet, Mich., over the Milwaukee Road and the Soo.

Mrs. Shirley Chisholm will be the first black congresswoman. She has been elected as Representative of New York's 12th district. One of her priorities will be to extend throughout the country black states' S.E.E.K. program to help Negroes and Puerto Ricans get to college. (APN Photo)

Black Congresswoman

Shirley Chisholm Has No Doubts About First Term

By JOY MILLER
AP Women's Editor

NEW YORK (AP) — When Shirley Chisholm (AP) — When Shirley Chisholm last summer, a man standing on the stoop shoved a crumpled envelope at her and said, "Chisholm, this is the first."

Inside the envelope was $9.69, the first contribution to her congressional campaign, collected by a group of people on welfare. Shirley sat down, took off her glasses and cried a little bit. Then she said to her husband, Conrad, "If I ever had any doubts, I don't now."

She still has no doubts about what she wants to do as she begins her term as the first black woman in Congress.

"I'm a very outspoken person," she says, "and people say to me: 'Now, Shirley, you're in the limelight and every eye is focused on you. You be careful about anything you say.'"

"I know this, but I'm not going to be quiet about issues. I got into politics because people brought me in, as the result of fighting for them on the local level in volunteer work. Now I must speak out on the national level for the people in my community."

Shirley Chisholm, a Democrat, is 44 years old and moves her slim 5-foot-4 frame with a lithe erectness that comes from dancing all her life. "I do the limbo, I do everything," she says, swaying and snapping her fingers. "That's why people in the street take to me: 'You're so damned regular. Shirley!' I'm not a stuffed shirt, even if I do have three degrees."

Several Degrees

Her degrees: BA, Brooklyn College, sociology major; MA, Columbia University, in early childhood education, and a professional diploma in education administration. She speaks fluent Spanish.

The new representative from the 12th District in Brooklyn she defeated James Farmer, former head of the Congress of Racial Equality—can discuss herself objectively, and redeem sometimes slightly immodest pronouncements with humor.

"I went through college all on scholarship. I'm a near-genius with an I.Q. of 150 or 151—probably lying up now."

She is never self-conscious, she says, and "my greatest strength is to articulate as well as I do and to think quickly on my feet."

Her weakest point: "I will do anything for children, white or black." She has none of her own, but has spent years teaching and working for better educational opportunities for them.

"I'm not worried about my political career. I'm worried about doing things for the people. If you do things for the people they'll send you back to office."

"Many congressmen are captives of special interests," she says. "You can't operate as an independent agent that way."

Ups and Downs

One minute she speaks almost despairingly of how much she can achieve in Congress: "What can you do as a freshman?"

But the next she is enthusiastically explaining the two projects she wants to promote.

"I want to revamp the entire poverty program making it a real job-training project, preparing people to become part of the mainstream. Too much money is being used for administrative costs and it's not filtering down to the poor."

She also wants to institute a national SEEK—Search for Education, Education and Knowledge—program to help young people of black and Puerto Rican origin to go to college. She sponsored the bill that brought about a New York State SEEK program two years ago.

"It's not that these young people are dumb, but they're victims of bad education in the ghetto and when they're given remedial work and put in city colleges 70 per cent have a B average or above," she says. When she walks around her district—400,000 population which is 30 per cent white and 70 per cent black and Puerto Rican and includes the black ghetto area of Bedford-Stuyvesant—she says: "I get discouraged when I see I'm just one person and can't cure the ills of 300 years. But I'm going to fight for my people. It's a tremendous challenge and I accept it."

She doesn't believe there is a place for white or black extremists. "America is still a multifaceted society and we have to live together."

"But there is a revolution going on here. If president-elect Nixon indicates in any way that he has no intention of furthering the dreams of black people, we may have some blood in this revolution. The black people in this country are not going to be turned back by anything or anybody."

Need of Change

"The revolution of blacks and the young people points up that the country needs change in certain areas, but those in control always want to maintain the status quo. How long will they silence the voices of change?"

Mrs. Chisholm believes she is representative of "a new breed of politician emerging on the scene." She began blazing her new Chisholm trail years ago when she became the first black Democratic National Committee member—man or woman.

"People say they don't know why I have to fight so hard. You've got a good education, three degrees and a good job. Why knock yourself out? Well, I'm trying to prove to the world and to young people in particular that there are politicians that really belong to the people. The people in the street are constantly by my side."

"People said, when I became the first black woman from Brooklyn in the New York Legislature four years ago, 'Shirley can't last!' They felt the political world would eat me up. But I'm a very determined woman."

"Politicians respect me for my intelligence but they don't like me for my independent spirit. On certain issues they are somewhat afraid of my mouth. I'm extremely talkative, and I know what I'm talking about."

Husband Conrad Chisholm, a former private detective who is now senior investigator for the Bureau of Medical Services, says he's very elated about what his wife of 19 years is doing. "She is a beacon light for her race."

Lives Near Daughter Mrs. Chisholm's Barbados-born mother, Ruby St. Hill, a dressmaker, lives only a few blocks from her daughter's Brooklyn apartment.

Her father born in British Guiana and a laborer in a lap bag factory, encouraged Shirley, oldest of four sisters, to make something of herself.

"He was my greatest idol," she recalls. "He believed in me. He said I'd be a great woman. When he died I almost went to pieces. I know you have it, Shirly," he said. "The road will be tough, but you'll do it. I'm going to do it to show my father."

After her election, Vice President Hubert Humphrey called to congratulate her. "Shirley," she reported he said, "you're the bright light."

She commiserated with his loss of the presidency, told him "you're young, you're ebullient" and ended with "keep the faith, baby."

Rises Faster Than U.S. Average

Appleton Crime Up 22 Per Cent

BY BILL KNUTSON

Post-Crescent Staff Writer

Violent crimes and crimes against property increased 22.6 per cent over 1967 in Appleton.

The increase is higher than the total average rise in serious crimes for American cities of 50,000 to 100,000 population, and exceeds the average rise for the entire nation.

According to the recently-released Federal Bureau of Investigation uniform crime reporting survey, the crime index nationally showed a 19 per cent increase during the first nine months of 1968 over the same period a year ago.

The increase for the same nine-month period in 1967 as compared with 1966 was 16 per cent.

Every type of major crime reported in the Appleton survey showed an increase over 1967. The crimes included are murder, rape, robbery, aggravated assault, burglary, theft over $50 and auto theft.

Lt. Robert Lathrop, head of the Appleton Police Department identification bureau, compared the FBI report for the first nine months of 1968 with his department's crime records for the entire year.

Lathrop cautioned that in some cases, the percentage figures might be misleading because the numbers involved are small.

For instance, murders increased by 100 per cent last year, but only because there was one last year and none in 1967. Last year's was a murder-suicide. The September 1967 death of George Schmidt, whose dismembered body was found near his northside home, has not been classified as murder.

One Rape

According to the FBI national report, murders jumped 15 per cent in the entire nation and nine per cent in cities of 50,000 to 100,000 during the first nine months of 1968.

Appleton recorded one forcible rape last year, the same as in 1967. On the national level there was a 17 per cent hike. Cities in the same size grouping of Appleton showed a 20 per cent average increase.

Lathrop said there were no robberies last year, compared with three in 1967. On both the national level and in cities of 50,000 to 100,000, robberies comprised the greatest single increase — 32 per cent and 33 per cent respectively.

There was a 50 per cent decrease in aggravated assaults in Appleton last year, but only two were recorded in 1967. Nationally, assaults increased 13 per cent, while there was a 19 per cent jump in cities of 50,000 to 100,000.

The greatest single increase in Appleton last year was in the burglary grouping. Burglaries totaled 259 last year, compared with 171 in 1967, a 34 per cent increase.

FBI records for the first three-quarters of 1968 show burglaries jumped 16 per cent nationally and 17 per cent in cities the size of Appleton.

Cities Fear Toothless Tarr Report

Mayors Bolster Alliance to Go Beyond Task Force Steps

BY WILLIAM C. CAREY

Post-Crescent Staff Writer

Several Wisconsin mayors are privately pre-judging the anticipated Tarr Task Force report on local government and finances, fearing it will lack the punch to force tax and legislative reform.

With this in mind they are proceeding with the formal organization of the Alliance of Cities and expect to focus attention on the report and recommendations to be presented to the legislature within the next two weeks.

The panel studying local problems and state-shared tax formulas for the past year is headed by Dr. Curtis Tarr, president of Lawrence University.

While Tarr's group has gained respect and support of city officials across the state in search of property tax relief for publically pinpointing the serious nature of urban problems, a majority of mayors feel the task force may be too general and take the "soft road" on suggesting possible solutions.

Aware of Implications

It is known the 20 city-member Alliance of Cities intends to give all-out support to the Tarr Committee's favorable recommendations, and also pick up from where the study group may have left off.

Probably no one is more aware of the implications of the impending report than Tarr himself. He maintains that the recommendations cannot call for instant change, and must be politically practical and acceptable.

But one Fox Valley mayor probably capsulized the thinking of his colleagues with the recent remark, "If there is anything in the Tarr Committee report that will cost the state money or the legislators votes... forget it."

And Assembly Speaker Harold Froehlich (R-Appleton) may have had insight or inside information this past week when he told an Appleton service club audience he did not think the Tarr Report would be as drastic in calling for change as many may have thought.

Difficult to Enact

Froehlich conceded that many of the problems which the task force studied in depth and put out so-called "trial balloon" solutions, appeared reasonable, but he also felt they would be difficult to enact.

A recent inter-departmental memo to a southern Wisconsin mayor from an administrative aide, who had been assigned to analyzing task force deliberations to date, did not exude enthusiasm.

"It appears unlikely that any of the major recommendations

GOP Leaders See Trouble

Democrats Score Knowles on Deficit

BY RICHARD JACOBSON

Post-Crescent Staff Writer

Gov. Knowles' warning last week of large state government deficit incensed two state Democratic leaders and admissions from two GOP leaders that the state faces an uncomfortable fiscal situation.

Robert Huber, D-West Allis, Assembly Minority leader, said he wasn't surprised to learn about the deficit which may be the biggest since Depression years.

"It was indicated two months ago on the basis of our discussion with the budget analysis staff that we were going to be in the red," he said.

"Of course, the executive branch wasn't listening to those figures at that time because of the election," Huber exclaimed. The Democratic leader said he didn't know whether the governor's austerity recommendations would make up the deficit. "I won't know until I check it out," he commented.

Democratic Atty. Gen. Bronson LaFollette, who charged Knowles with fiscal irresponsibility throughout his unsuccessful campaign for the governorship in the fall, said from his Madison home Saturday.

"Knowles was able to pull the wool over the people's eyes once, but the people won't forget it."

LaFollette doesn't believe Knowles' austerity program will make up the deficit. In fact, the attorney general said the "deficit is going to be much higher."

On the other side of the issue, Assembly Speaker Harold Froehlich, R-Appleton, said: "At first I was surprised because I thought the welfare department had a better idea or controls over what their expenditures would be."

"But I'm not surprised as far as welfare is concerned. Every state in the nation has had budget problems and we're in the soup with the rest of the states."

Show Surprise

Assemblyman David O. Martin, R-Neenah, indicated he was surprised. At the last report the revenue picture appeared to have a small surplus for this fiscal year ending June 30, he said.

He said he knew the medical systems cost throughout the state were going to be higher for the next biennium "but not by the end of this fiscal year."

Martin said he wasn't sure what the austerity program will do, but he favors Knowles' recommendations.

We have a serious financial problem facing us but we don't

Teen-Ager Hurt In 3-Car Crash

A 17-year-old Appleton youth, driving a 1967 sports car suffering a forehead laceration and chest and leg bruises late Saturday afternoon in a three-vehicle collision at Outagamie County trunks A and O.

Walter W. Witt III, 808 E. McKinley St., was taken by Larry's Ambulance to Appleton Memorial Hospital. His car was demolished, police said.

The other drivers, uninjured, were Michael Quinn, 20, 4635 W. Broadway Drive, and Robert Lloyd, 47, route 1, West DePere.

Police said Witt was traveling west on O and failed to see a stop sign because of an icy windshield. His car was struck by the Quinn auto, moving south on A, in the intersection.

The Quinn auto then was pushed into the Lloyd car, also moving south on A, police reported. Damage to the Quinn car was estimated at $450 and the Lloyd car, $150.

Two Broken Windows Cause Extensive Damage to Church

A northside Appleton church was found chilled to sub-zero temperatures Saturday afternoon after vandals broke two windows last week.

Damage to the plumbing was believed to be extensive, according to Outagamie County police Saturday night.

Police were called to the St. Nicholas Greek Orthodox Church, 3333 N. French Road, by Peter Petros, a church board member, who entered the building to repair an inside door lock.

Bathroom fixtures were frozen, police said, and an extensive amount of damage to piping was possible. Police said the west wind drove cold air through the building but they theorized the windows were broken after the storms because no snow was found inside.

Only the Remnants of family fun were left late last week at the Menominee County cottage of Robert Christensen, who died there with his three children early Friday. Two snowmobiles sat idle, and a snow saucer rested at the top of the hill leading to Lake Moshawquit. The cause of their death is still undetermined.

Fears Wolf River Setback

Bubolz Blasts State Design Of Area-Wide Plan Districts

A tentative state plan to create multi-county regional planning agencies covering the state has been criticized for disregarding local interests by the chairman of the Northeastern Wisconsin Regional Planning Commission.

Gordon A. Bubolz, in a letter to Gov. Warren P. Knowles, warned the state would be making a grave mistake by designing separate regional organizations serving the Fox and Wolf River basins. The present organizations are serving the areas well, he added.

Surface waters which flow through communities and across county boundaries create interrelationships which can best be coped with if the counties are part of the major drainage basin included in the planning effort, he said.

Bubolz also was critical of plans for putting four northern member counties of the regional planning commission in another and local level, a spokesman has said.

This disregards important major regional and area planning needs and considerations, he warned.

Commission officials and planners fear their on-going anti-pollution and other programs will be interrupted by the state's anticipated plans to reorganize the state into multi-county agencies.

Commission representatives adopted a resolution in November opposing any reorganization plans pulling member counties from its ranks.

COG Indefinite

Knowles last summer directed the State Department of Local Affairs and Development to develop a plan for multi-county agencies to cover the state. A tentative plan would add several northeastern Wisconsin counties to the boundaries of the existing commission but also would put four or five northern counties into another agency.

The local affairs department has delayed coming out with a definite plan until all avenues have been studied at the state planning commission in another and local level, a spokesman has said.

The Fox Valley Council of Governments (COG) has not taken a position on the tentative plan but the COG officials have asked their executive director to keep tabs on the state's moves. Eugene E. Franchetti, executive director, has said that urban areawide metropolitan planning must be kept in the proper context and not diluted in a vast multi-county organization with more rural members than urban.

Bubolz had indicated endorsement of the tentative plan several months ago but not at the expense of the present regional accomplishments of the regional planning commission.

He wrote the governor: "This proposal, as we understand it, is without proper regard to local interests and their deep concerns and apparently in disregard of the comprehensive regional work that was instrumental in the formation of the commission."

Asks Delay

He pointed out the growing developments and encroachments in the Wolf River region which are adversely affecting the Wolf River.

It became clear in the late 1950s, he said, that "the most effective answer would be for all counties in the basin to join forces." The result was the organization of the Wolf River Basin Regional Planning Commission, now called Northeastern Wisconsin Regional Planning Commission.

This group, along with COG and county and city planning agencies, can work collectively and make its experiences and proposals available for use by all member counties and communities.

Bubolz said that a real concern is that the state not act until all documentary information is scanned. To date, he said, information is scarce.

Fond du Lac Feels Shortage of Blood

FOND DU LAC — St. Agnes Hospital here has a severe shortage of whole blood supplies.

Mrs. James Ruecker, in charge of hospital blood supplies, said transfusions are being allowed only in emergency cases. Other surgery has been postponed.

Normally the hospital stocks about 50 units of blood. It now has about 30 units of blood, enough to cover emergencies.

Whole blood is normally supplied by the Badger Red Cross Blood Center, Madison, but the center has issued a bulletin saying shortages are expected to continue until Jan. 5.

Only Emergencies

L. J. Petersen, administrative director of the blood center, said hospital requests are being met on an emergency basis.

The cause behind the shortage is three-pronged, with the high flu incident as the primary factor. Potential donors afflicted with the virus are not allowed to give blood. Weather is another factor with cold and blizzards discouraging donors from trekking to the blood centers. Holiday activities also cut into the donor list.

Petersen said the blood center has asked that "elective" surgery be postponed. Milwaukee has had a shortage of blood for two weeks.

Not as Severe

Although blood shortages exist in other Fox River Valley hospitals, none are as severe as St. Agnes' situation.

Center, Oshkosh, noted a shortage of negative type bloods, but no surgery has been canceled at the hospital. The hospital has not called upon donors to give blood.

Special donors have been called to assist Theda Clark Hospital.

In Diocesan Schools

Lay-Teacher Ratio Rises

BY MAIJA PENEKIS

Post-Crescent Staff Writer

It has long been known that a major reason for the increasing cost of Catholic education is the decline in religious vocations.

This decline is reflected in the Green Bay Diocesan schools, where the number of lay teachers has risen to an all-time high of 44 per cent.

A look at statistics compiled by the Diocesan office of education reveals that the percentage of lay instructors has risen by almost 10 per cent in the past three years.

At present 708 laymen are teaching in Catholic schools, out of a total of 1,654 faculty members. Last year, the comparable total of lay instructors was 636, or nearly 39 per cent of the 1,673 teachers, and during the 1966-67 school year, there were 581, or nearly 35 per cent of the 1,640 total.

Even though the decline in religious teachers is almost proportionate to the increase in lay instructors (113 fewer religious and 127 more lay), the combined totals have remained relatively stable, despite substantial reductions in the number of students enrolled.

In 1966, there were 1,640 teachers in all; in 1967, 1,673, and in 1968, 1,654.

The Rev. Richard Kleiber, diocesan superintendent of schools, was out of the city and unavailable for comment, but the theory held by a number of other educators is that classroom size has been cut, keeping the number of pupils to about 30, in line with the state's recommendation.

"We used to have 40 and sometimes even 50 pupils in one room, and it was just too much," said one sister. "Each child should have more independent help and the only way to do that is to cut down on the classroom enrollment," she added.

Biggest Problems

As can be expected, the biggest problems have arisen on the elementary level, with no appreciable differences on the high school level. Although no breakdown is available on the latter level, it is safe to assume changes would be minute.

In 1966 the 11 high schools in the diocese had 150 lay and 275 religious instructors. In 1967 the lay teachers were increased by five to 155, and the religious dropped by nine to 266. Both the lay and religious teacher numbers dropped to 151 and 262 respectively this year, presumably because of the decrease in students.

Elementary Change

Although the big area of change was on the elementary level, statistically it is nearly impossible to see a great decline or increase in any one county.

The 11 schools in Calumet County had 24 lay teachers in 1966 and 1967 and 28 in 1968. The number of religious teachers declined from 44 in the first two years to 37 in 1968.

Outagamie, with 20 grade schools, had 121 lay teachers in 1966; 130 in 1967, and 122 in 1968. Religious went from 104 in 1966 and 1967 to 140 in 1968.

The two schools in Waupaca stayed at a 6 to 10 ratio in 1966 and 1967 and an 8-to-8 ratio in 1968.

Teacher Ratio

Winnebago County with 11 schools, had 60 lay and 95 religious teachers in 1966; 63 and 98 in 1967, and 64 and 83 in 1968.

The biggest loss in religious teachers outside the Valley was reflected by Brown County statistics, which went from 236 to 196 religious teachers and from 119 to 153 lay teachers over the three-year period.

OSU May Need New Crisis, Student Activist Believes

OSHKOSH — Richard Ehlenfeldt is a student activist. He believes classroom experience is only part of "getting an education" at a college or university.

"The academic experience is essential, but there are many other things surrounding it that are also important," he said. Ehlenfeldt is studying at Oshkosh State University (OSU).

He believes recent disorders involving black students at OSU have boosted activism in the Students for a Democratic Society (SDS), the Young Socialist Alliance and other student activist groups on campus.

"If they can do that to those black students, they can do it to anyone," Ehlenfeldt says, after noting what he and the local SDS chapter consider unfair treatment of the black students by the university in the hearings that followed the disruptions.

He came to Oshkosh with his wife in January, 1967, and enrolled at the university with "absolutely no intention of participating in campus affairs."

He maintained that intention for one year, but "the longer I stayed, and the more acquainted with the university I became, the more problems I could see."

Little Things
"It seemed then that there could be a lot more little things done for students to make life on campus more interesting and rewarding," he recalls. Minor student reforms were the issue on his mind at that time.

"We were interested in changing these things," he says, noting that he and a friend began discussing what they could do.

Ehlenfeldt then saw a sign on campus advertising the formation of a local SDS chapter.

"When we saw it, we felt that SDS could be a vehicle for change," he said.

Ehlenfeldt became the first president of the SDS chapter when it formed in January, 1968.

The chapter called a rally in May to present nine student demands to the administration. The administration answered the demands by saying most of them were either met or in the process of being acted upon.

"We have seen no progress, just like the black students," Ehlenfeldt says. However, he believes failure by the university to answer these and other demands will make SDS more militant in the future.

"As SDS becomes more militant, all those administrators in Dempsey Hall will shake their heads in bewilderment just like they did after the demonstration by the black students," Ehlenfeldt predicts.

Ehlenfeldt now believes that the administration will not respond to student needs until a crisis develops. He cites the black students' demonstration of Nov. 21 as an example.

"If this is what they need before they'll do anything, then they'll probably get it," he says.

What originally began as a belief in the need for more student services has become, in Ehlenfeldt's mind, a belief in the need for student involvement in decision and policymaking functions of the university.

SDS Center

He says efforts by the administration to involve students in decisionmaking committees have "so far been only tokenism."

Ehlenfeldt believes that student activism at WSU-O went "beyond our fondest dreams" in 1968.

"Political activism is mainly centered in SDS on this campus," he says, "but we hope it will extend beyond that in the future."

OSHKOSH — The outline of an industrial park next to Winnebago County Airport continues to be a vague challenge here for business and civic leaders.

About 75 acres adjacent to the airport have been earmarked for industrial development.

Edward Kelly, executive vice president, of the Oshkosh Chamber of Commerce views the development as an opportunity for creation of a resource utilizing the airport and its transportation facilities.

Already the airport service is rated by Kelly and others as particularly important in keeping Oshkosh producers competitive especially in Eastern markets. Its mail and shipping services via North Central Airlines are extremely important, he said.

Freight Volume
Area business and manufacturing last year generated 1,832,729 pounds of air freight here last year, moved by North Central, a figure which topped a gradually increasing air freight business.

Louis Griedl, airlines manager, said the freight consisted largely of paper products on long hauls, machine parts and biological specimens. He estimated incoming freight for area firms about matched the outgoing material.

Area business and industry account for a major portion of the airline's passenger service out of Oshkosh Griedl added. Salesmen for Oshkosh firms cover their territories by commercial airlines. Executives attend business conferences. People from mechanics to company board chairmen to whom time is more travel North Central to their destinations or to airports originating flights that cover the globe.

Griedl said the airline loaded 56,097 passengers here last year, 5,423 more than in 1967. Another 56,836 flew into Winnebago County Airport, 5,097 more than the previous year.

North Central planes flew 751,474 pounds of first class and parcel post (mostly Parcel Air Lift) mail out of Oshkosh, bound for destinations south and east.

The flow of air mail out of Oshkosh increased about 100 per cent beginning last July when much surface transport was discontinued except for bulk mail and the first class mail which goes to Green Bay for air lift from Austin Straubel Field.

Another 288,747 pounds of air express was generated at the Winnebago County port.

Producer goods manufactured in Oshkosh, mainstay of the city's industry, use air service for fast, sure delivery of repair parts.

"This weather, 75 per cent of our parts shipments go by air," a traffic manager of an Oshkosh transportation equipment firm declared. He said about half the company's annual repair parts shipments go by air. "The service helps keep us competitive," he declared.

Repair Parts
He said air freight charges aren't too different from those of surface carriers.

Producers of auxiliary power units, too, said they use air service frequently for transport of repair parts. Any break down in back-up power units used in radar and computer installations is critical to the customer and to the producer.

An estimated 75 per cent of the biological specimens produced in Oshkosh travel by air for delivery in the best condition. Air service is extending their markets, one spokesman said, making it possible to serve customers abroad.

A number of other Oshkosh industries estimated their use of air transport at 1 per cent or less of their parts output. "But that's an essential part," one spokesman emphasized. "It delivers the needed part that keeps our equipment operating despite an emergency."

Those who think of an air industrial park envision uses far beyond that of today.

Corporate Aircraft
An air industrial park might attract industries who use corporate aircraft to transport personnel and find it timesaving to be located near an airport, Kelly points out. Others might be interested in an airport location because of their relation to the aviation business.

Griedl has a logical reason for use of air transport for shipment of products. It provides 24-hour delivery anywhere in the United States, he pointed out.

Relying on fast, sure service, firms can keep inventories to a minimum, thus eliminating the cost of warehouse storage and stocking operations.

This feature, alone, he said, probably accounts for a lot of the air cargo operation.

Howard, Needles, Tamm and Bergendoff, Milwaukee aeronautics consultant engineers, suggest a long list of operations whose owners are often interested in air industrial park locations. Among them are drug distributors, manufacturers of hospital equipment and the like, parts manufacturers, a variety of light industries, apparel and textile firms, distributors of magazines and periodicals, and office complexes housing a wide-traveling personnel.

Predictions For 1980

"Free World Air Cargo," a publication of the Lockheed Corporation, predicts the scope of air carrier operations. Airlines carried a billion tons of cargo in 1965. By 1975, predictions are that air cargo will have grown to 6.4 billion tons. Conservative estimates, the publication said, put the tonnage at 20.8 billion by 1980.

Chamber of Commerce and allied groups have for some time shown interest in development of the city's industrial park acreage as an air industrial park capable of attracting new industry to the city.

There has been discussion, but no action, on an industrial park land sale moratorium to provide time for planning uses for the area.

So far, suggestions for an air industrial park have been halted for lack of an educated opinion on the feasibility of the concept in Oshkosh where urban distances from plant to port are still relatively short and surface travel time is minimal.

Although sales of the city's industrial park land are occasional only, they do occur. Organizations interested in promoting the air industrial park reportedly are slow to commit funds for a feasibility study unless there is firm assurance that the land will be available from the city when the study is completed.

Two Injuries Reported

Increased Snowmobile Use Has State Patrol Worried

Although heavy December snowfalls have encouraged and occasionally necessitated the use of snowmobiles, Fox Valley authorities apparently are facing no serious problems caused by misuse or accidents.

However, Wisconsin State Patrol officials foresee the development of a dangerous situation because of the increasingly popular winter sport.

Most Fox Valley law enforcement agencies said they were not overly concerned about snowmobiles operating on roadways, and had not issued special warnings to the public.

Agencies reported receiving some complaints about snowmobiles, mainly for operating on roads, and said first-time warnings had been issued to operators. Two citations reportedly were issued in December to two operators in Manawa by a Wisconsin State Patrolman.

Only a few accidents were reported, and two resulted in injuries.

Possible Concussion

A 16-year-old Kimberly youth suffered a possible concussion and other facial and head injuries Friday night when his toboggan, being pulled by a snowmobile, struck a tree in Sunset park.

He was taken to St. Elizabeth

Hospital, and Kimberly police were continuing their investigation Saturday.

An Oshkosh snowmobile operator suffer minor injuries last month when he was thrown from his machine while driving on Lake Winnebago.

The state recorded three snowmobile fatalities Dec. 28 when three persons riding illegally on a village street in Manitowish County were struck by a train.

Since then, the State Bureau of Highway Safety Promotion has issued a warning to snowmobile operators, reiterating the statement that accompanied the state's new snowmobile regulations.

Snowmobiles cannot operate on any highway, but in some cases can cross a roadway or operate outside the ditch line on a two- or three-lane highway, the bureau declared.

State officials also have urged operators to stay away from ditch riding at night because the single headlight often confuses auto drivers. They warn that the low profile of the machines makes them difficult to see from a passing car.

Chilton authorities issued a strong warning to snowmobile operators following several recent incidents and complaints.

However, most authorities have had no reason for a special public warning.

"The problem just hasn't been that serious," commented Sgt. Robert Keating, of the Outagamie County traffic department.

"We have had isolated complaints, and in these cases, the owners or operators have been contacted," he added, noting these came during the heavy snowfalls.

Outagamie patrolmen are aware of the growing sales of snowmobiles but there has been no need to do more than instruct officers to enforce the law regarding the snow vehicles, Keating said.

One Little Chute police officer said that he had run several operators off the streets during a late December blizzard but issued no citations. He saw them on the streets while patrolling, he said.

Waupaca County police reported several complaints during recent snowstorms. One operator driving in a village of Readfield alley struck a parked car but was not hurt, they reported.

They reported the state patrol apparently had cited two operators for driving on a Manawa street.

Authorities in Fond du Lac County also reported two minor accidents but no injuries. In both cases, the operators lost control and hit parked cars in a park, they said.

Appleton police said most of their complaints came from outlying areas, more conducive to snowmobile activity. The same was true in Neenah and Menasha, according to police, who reported that they were enforcing the state regulations.

A Neenah policeman said the only accidents or arrests had come last winter when the regulations first went into effect.

Kaukauna police reported four or five complaints on snowmobiles being operated on streets, sidewalks and in parks. Drivers were warned and the rules were explained, they said.

An Oshkosh officer said he could recall no complaints or arrests of snowmobile operators this year. He noted the department had issued a public warning a year ago.

The state patrol, however, is concerned about a potentially serious problem that may result from the growing popularity of the sport. Lewis V. Versnik, patrol chief, said recently that there are signs of problems in lost and stolen machines, snowmobile crashes on highways, and serious and fatal injuries to operators across the state.

And the Winter Is but a Pup

Winter came early and came to stay.

It hammered temperatures to record lows and heaped snow to record highs.

December weather statistics compiled by the Wisconsin Michigan Power Co. observer made official something every Appleton snow shoveller knew that the month's snowfall of 28.1 inches was an all-time record. This is 19.3 inches above normal for the month.

And all of this white fury was packed into the final 13 days. Only one inch had fallen before Dec. 19th when the winter's first big blizzard hit and pelted the city with 7½ inches of snow. Nine days later, on the 28th, the second storm of the season hit delivering 8 inches of snow.

Coldest Day
The month's total precipitation, rain and melted snow, amounted to 3.32 inches, another record, and is 1.93 inches above normal. The old record of 3.12 inches was set in 1959.

Coldest day of the month was its last, the 31st, when a reading of 15 degrees below zero was recorded. It was a record for that date.

Mean temperature was 21.7

of 1262. The 1968 accumulative total was 2,791, 79 below the normal.

The wind prevailed from the northwest at an average speed of 8.7 miles per hour. The peak gust of 50 m.p.h. occurred on the 5th. There were 19 cloudy days, 9 partly cloudy days, and only 3 clear days during the month.

January normals for Appleton include a mean temperature of 18 degrees and 1.31 inches of precipitation. The daily mean temperature can be expected to decrease from 20 degrees at the beginning to 15 at the end of the month. Daily hours of daylight will increase from 9 hours, 54 minutes at the beginning of the month to 10 hours 47 minutes at the end, an increase of 33 minutes. The United States Weather Bureau January forecast calls for below normal temperatures and moderate to heavy precipitation.

Want to Live Away From Home

VTE Students Want Campus Setting

BY MAIJA PENIKIS
Post-Crescent Staff Writer

The modern technical school student probably will live away from home, eat complete meals on campus, participate in a great variety of activities and, in general, want the same type of facilities available to the students in any other school of higher education.

At least that's the ideal picture painted by 923 fulltime students enrolled in Vocational, Technical and Adult Education District 12 (VTE-12) in a recent survey conducted by the student services staff.

According to Duane Stevens, assistant director of student services, the study on housing, food services and student activities was conducted to determine how the students feel about and what they want in the new physical plant.

A whopping 96 per cent of the students, 702 men and 221 women, filled out the survey.

Participants represented students enrolled at the Appleton and Oshkosh technical institutes and the Neenah Vocational School.

Since a campus style situation, complete with activities and food services, can be developed only if the majority of the students are not commuters, almost everything seems to hinge on where the students prefer to live.

Despite the fact that dormitories have not been included in plans for the initial $57 million facility to be located about a mile and a half from Appleton's center, 72 per cent of the students indicated they would like to live away from home.

About 30 per cent are doing so at present and a significant factor in this is that of these, 50 have homes within five miles from school and 73 live less than 25 miles away. It would appear, then, that the students are aware that in order to give the school a campus atmosphere, full involvement by the majority is necessary.

Want Snack Bar

Going hand in hand with this is the food service situation. As can be expected, a comprehensive plan (breakfast, lunch, and dinner) lead the survey with 55 per cent of the vote. A great majority (62 per cent) also felt they would like a snack bar.

Perhaps the most interesting aspect, and in some respects the most surprising, is the student activities survey, which showed a strong leaning toward intramurals, athletics, publications, student organizations and even music.

Although the percentage varied with the sport, great interest was shown in all the major ones. In the intramural program, bowling, pool, basketball, football and swimming gleaned the approval of more than 50 per cent of the group. Tennis, golf, volleyball were not far behind.

Won Resounding Approval

An interschool athletic program, almost totally a spectator activity won the resounding approval of the body as 68 per cent voted for football, 71 per cent for basketball and 37 per cent for baseball.

Student publications also are desired with a school newspaper favored by 75 per cent of those responding. It would appear that a publication of some type in which the students could express their views and learn of the school activities would reduce the divisions between the various departments.

The survey showed a 28 per cent interest in band and a 26 per cent interest in chorus. And although the percentage is not great, statistically 250 students were interested in band and 238 in chorus—more than most major colleges and universities have in either unit.

Natural Gas Rate Increase Expected

Hike Requested After Supplier Boosts Price to Utility Firm

Natural gas rate increases for Wisconsin Michigan Power Co. customers could be put into effect soon, if the utility company's expected request wins state agency approval.

In a ruling handed down Friday by the Public Service Commission (PSC) the utility was given the right to adjust gas prices, either upward or downward, provided it meets PSC requirements.

Wisconsin Michigan serves approximately 17,000 natural gas customers in the Fox Cities and surrounding area.

Prices Increased
Giving rise to the power company's petition to the PSC for a rate adjustment clause was a sharp increase in the price the utility is required to pay for the gas it distributes to its customers.

The Michigan Wisconsin Pipeline Co., which supplies gas to the utility, has upped its prices 8.4 per cent and the utility has argued to the PSC that it is unable to absorb the increase and, as a result, is forced to raise the prices it charges the customers.

If approved, the rate paid by the average customer for fuel to heat a home would be increased slightly under 4 per cent, a company official explained.

Conditions Given

Several conditions have been stipulated by the PSC.

It requires that the utility give the PSC 60 days notice before increasing prices. This will give the PSC time to investigate the utility's financial records to determine if, through economies elsewhere in the company's operations, it might be able to absorb the increase without passing it on to the customer.

In the current price raise situation, however, the PSC says it would consider waiving the 60-day period. The utility is expected to request the waiver to put price hikes into effect as soon as possible.

Pass on Benefits

The PSC also has stipulated that the utility pass on refunds to the customers, if its supplier, the pipeline company, reduces prices.

A federal regulatory agency also figures into the price change. The pipeline company, which comes under jurisdiction of the Federal Power Commission (FPC) had applied more than six months ago for permission to increase prices 8.4 per cent. The FPC suspended the price hike for five months before finally permitting it to be put into effect Dec. 1 on a conditional basis. If the FPC adjusts the pipeline's rate hike downward, the pipeline will be required to refund to the utility, which in turn would be required to pass the refund on to its customers.

Soviet Trip Offered to WSU Youths

Post-Crescent Madison Bureau

MADISON — Students at Wisconsin state universities will have the opportunity to join a two-week study trip to the Soviet Union from March 29 to April 12, receiving academic credit for the trip.

The Soviet Union seminar has been authorized by the board of regents of the schools. Each of the universities will have a quota of students and each school will send a faculty member as an advisor on the trip. Prof. Robert Frost, of the political science faculty of Wisconsin State University-Platteville, is trip coordinator.

Flames Destroy Pizza Parlor In Green Bay

In sub-zero temperatures Green Bay firemen battled an early morning fire Saturday which gutted most of Frank and Pat's Pizza Parlor, 709 Bellevue St.

The temperature was 11 below zero as flames leaped from the structure. Six pieces of fire equipment and 16 men responded to the 5:30 a.m. call.

Firemen remained on the scene until 8:30 a.m. and confined major damage to two store rooms. Exact cause of the blaze and damage has not been determined.

Fire officials said, however, that the blaze appeared to have started in a store room. The rest of the structure, owned by Wilson Allen, sustained extensive smoke and water damage. The pizza operation was run by Frank Pierre and Patrick Earl.

Kaukauna, Little Chute Show Steady Growth

KAUKAUNA — The Kaukauna and Little Chute areas experienced steady growth in 1968, local telephone figures indicate.

The Kaukauna office of the Wisconsin Telephone Co. reports a three per cent increase in the number of telephones in service in the Kaukauna area and a five per cent increase in the Little Chute area.

Telephones in Kaukauna now total 6,377 and in the Little Chute exchange 5,500.

Investment Grows

In the Wrightstown area a four per cent increase was reported, bringing the total number of phones to 800.

Total telephone company investment in plant and equipment in the area reached $4,500,000 as a result of construction activity during the year. One of the major projects during 1968 was the installation of switching equipment in the Kaukauna central office at a cost of $70,000.

Installation of this equipment provided an additional 400 subscriber lines, bringing the capacity of the office to 4,266 lines, Flaherty noted. He also reported a decrease in annoyance calls, due mainly to the development of better detection equipment.

He pointed out, once a customer signs a complaint, police and telephone company officials work closely in tracking down the originator of the calls.

Undaunted by $90,000 Fire

Three Brothers to Continue Operation of Hietpas Farm

BY PAT DUFFEY

Post-Crescent Farm Editor

LITTLE CHUTE — A 70-year family tradition, undaunted by a disastrous $90,000 fire on New Year's Day, will be continued at the Hietpas Dairy Farm.

Bert Hietpas, spokesman for the three brother-owners, said the dairy plant operation, plus retail and wholesale routes, will be continued.

As originally planned before the fire, the remaining dairy farm operation will be discontinued. The surviving 55 head of dairy cattle, about half of them registered Holsteins, were sold at auction eight days ago.

The auction had been scheduled prior to Christmas but was twice postponed due to severe weather conditions. A tent, chairs and loudspeaker system installed on the grounds for the approaching sale were among the items destroyed in the fire.

Four-Cow-Farm
The tradition was started by Nick Hietpas in 1898 when he purchased a 70-acre farm near Little Chute. He worked part time in the Kimberly paper mill and the rest of the time on his four-cow dairy farm which also featured pigs and chickens.

While Mrs. Hietpas churned the butter at home, he peddled butter and eggs to 74 customers in the area. They purchased a team of ponies and one delivery wagon.

Gradually the herd and customers were increased. The milk route was started in 1917, former DHIA fieldman in the Bert recalls, because that's when he joined the operation, as a herdsman. He had earlier experience with his personal herd. This year marks his 15th year as a general and dairy project leader of the Golden Rule 4-H club near Seymour.

Through his efforts, the Hietpas Dairy Farm was honored as a "Friend of 4-H" by the Outagamie County 4-H Leader Association in 1967. The farm had been the site for several county 4-H dairy judging clinics. The firm also provided other assistance to the program.

Frederickson and Harold Hietpas together developed one of the outstanding Holstein dairy herds in the state in terms of production and type. The latest DHIA figures on the rolling herd showed an average of 559 pounds of butterfat and 13.616 pounds of milk based on a 41 per cent test.

Due to poor health Harold decided he could no longer play an active role in the operation, so the brothers decided on the Grade A milk from their farm herd disposal sale. But the New suppliers. The outside supply Year's Day fire destroyed a needed to supplement the chunk of the 155-head herd, 3,000 pounds of milk produced dairy barn, equipment and feed, on the farm each day by the large herd.

Bert spent his years in the dairy plant end of the operation. He started as a boy helping in preparation for the first pre-delivering milk and working in Christmas sale date. Grand the farm milkhouse.

In the early days, he recalls, the fire contained, and all the bottles and cans were saved the dairy equipment and washed by hand. Since milking buildings so that phase of the herd also was done by hand, business could continue.

The Hietpas Dairy Farm operation was one of the few of its type remaining in this region of the state. From a small family farm it progressed to a modern operation servicing 1,300 customers in the city of Appleton.

I don't know how you spent your New Year's Eve, but we spent ours at home with our family. And to me that is about the best place and the best way.

Between the Rose Bowl game and Christmas toys, everything seemed to go in fine fashion. Later on the family left, son and daughter for a party with friends and the grandchildren to sleep 1968 away. And grandma and I spent the rest of the evening in the best possible company — each other.

Hope you had as much fun and that 1969 will be the best of all years with the best of all things for you and yours.

One thing about 1968. There was a lot of news. Here are a few of the things that impressed me recently. Maybe you noticed them, too.

—For instance, a Post-Crescent headline says that "Campus Unrest to be Target of Legislators." That's a switch. Up to now it has been the legislators who have been the targets.

—And it says "Girls to be Permitted to Wear Slacks in New York Schools." Well, it's better than going without them.

—Then politics are getting back in the news again. There's a story about school board and aldermanic posts up for grabs. And so is the last straw, if you really want to grab.

—Slow Down on Sewage Utility, COG Advises." Good advice, probably, but I certainly hope nothing like that happens to ours.

—Another story tells how tions were really charitable donations.

—Then Dr. Thosteson says that "Age Causes Body to Shrink Harmlessly." So far it hasn't caused mine to shrink at all.

—Survey shows teens handle fairly large sums of money, a news story says. Ask Dad, he knows. That's all the survey you need.

—And Mayor Buckley is going to run for the school board! Well, a little book learnin' never hurt nobody. He's going to run as the working man's candidate. Have to admit he has been a pretty busy boy, lately. Now, if something will only open up on the county board that George is fit and able for...

Toboggan Crash Hurts Teen-Ager

KIMBERLY — A 16-year-old Kimberly youth suffered a possible concussion and other face and head injuries Friday afternoon when his toboggan collided with a tree in Sunset Park.

David Asman, 345 Lind St., was taken by Larry's Ambulance to St. Elizabeth Hospital where he is being treated for possible nose and jaw fractures, and several missing teeth.

Asman reportedly was being pulled by a snowmobile when the accident occurred.

Midwinter Slowdown Puts Employment Rate On Downward Skid

Construction Trades Still Busy Putting Projects Under Roof

A marked slowdown in overall employment activity in the Fox Cities area is indicated in the December manpower report of the Wisconsin State Employment Service (WSES).

The WSES indicated there were exceptions in professional, skilled and foundry worker positions. However, demands for paper mill workers, with a few exceptions, are at a standstill.

In spite of seasonal layoffs in the construction industry, and others in food processing, there is no significant change from the mid-September figure, the WSES noted.

Slight Gains
The WSES report also noted that contract construction shows a gain of 5.6 per cent over mid-September, reflecting a rush to get projects under roof prior to adverse weather conditions, and a yearly increase of 9.7 per cent over November, 1967.

Relatively large commercial building projects during the year were responsible for this increase over the one-year ago figure.

Wholesale and retail figures have purposely been omitted from year ago comparisons because of the inadequacy of reported figures for this group, the WSES added.

The WSES also predicted worker needs by area employment will be down sharply in mid-January, reflecting post holiday declines in trade and winter slowdowns in construction and repair as well as manufacturing groups.

Levels Increase
Unemployment levels will increase due to seasonal factors and should approximate levels experienced last year.

It is not expected, however, that workers supply will be proportionally increased, as many of the workers on temporary layoff will be recalled.

Other part-time and temporary workers will withdraw from the work force after the holiday season.

U. S. Fiscal No Place To Conceal $1,800

BROCKTON, Mass. (AP) —

Anthony Ulianella, 72, hid the plane ticket he planned to use to fly to his native Italy and $1,800 in cash in an American flag in his bureau drawer, then left his apartment to celebrate New Year's Eve with his son.

He returned to find the ticket and the money stolen, as well as a necklace which belonged to this late wife, police said.

"Where People Come First"

Troop Pullout Possible, but 'In About Year'

Now Would be Too Soon to Start Withdrawal, Marine Leader Says

WASHINGTON (AP) — Gen. Leonard F. Chapman Jr., commandant of the Marine Corps, said Saturday it is too early to start pulling substantial numbers of U.S. troops out of Vietnam.

Chapman said such a move could begin "in a matter of a year at the rate we're going now."

"I don't think we have gotten to the point yet where we can in the near future start to withdraw a substantial number of U.S. troops," the top Marine said in an exclusive interview before he left for a 10-day trip to Vietnam and other points in the Far East.

"But I think if the main force (enemy) units stay out of country as they are now doing—stay out of contact and out of country—and if we plow on the way we're going, improving the ARVN (South Vietnamese Army) and eradicating the guerrillas, the time is not too far away when we'll be able to start such a move."

Quick Agreement
Chapman was the first member of the Joint Chiefs of Staff to speak publicly on the troop withdrawal question since Secretary of Defense Clark M. Clifford made it clear he is anxious for a quick agreement with North Vietnam on a mutual pullout of forces from South Vietnam.

Both Clifford and Henry Kissinger, President-elect Nixon's assistant for national security affairs, advocate efforts to gain a mutual troop-withdrawal agreement with Hanoi in advance of a political settlement in South Vietnam.

The four-star Marine general sidestepped questions on this issue, saying, "the political settlement aspects of it are pretty much out of my field."

Possible Assault
However, he said that if the North Vietnamese should break their side of a troop pullback agreement "and again assault with main force units, it would be one devil of a problem."

"Speaking from the military viewpoint," Chapman said, "I would have to advocate that we go back in and this time really clobber them."

He said he judged the timing of a military withdrawal on whether or not the United States had achieved its military objectives.

"First is the defeat of the enemy main-force units and driving them out of the country," Chapman said. "We have substantially done that—at least temporarily pulling substantial numbers of U.S. troops out of Vietnam."

Secondly, he said, there is the problem of dealing with the guerrillas.

"There, for the first time, we are able to devote almost our full attention to chasing the guerrilla—identifying him and eliminating him," the Marine commandant said.

"And we are doing that at a real good pace" in the northern-most First Corps and generally elsewhere in South Vietnam, Chapman said.

"All of our forces in country, including in the Delta, are carrying out what is referred to as an accelerated pacification program," he said, adding that "it's going well."

The third factor to be considered in any U.S. troop withdrawal is the improvement of the South Vietnamese armed forces, he said.

"It's moving along," Chapman said. "I don't want to over-dramatize the speed with which it's going. It's moving though."

Not Both

The Marine chief said he agreed with the conclusion of some observers that the South Vietnamese army today could handle the Viet Cong but not the North Vietnamese army, if left to carry the fight by itself.

Chapman voiced some doubts about one of the ingredients in his equation—that the North Vietnamese will keep their regular units out of South Vietnam.

He suggested that, "if we do plow ahead with ... increasing snowballing success on the guerrilla side and improving the ARVN, I think there's going to come a point when the North Vietnamese are going to have to conclude they can't permit us to go on doing that."

"So the assumption that the main force units will stay out of country may not be a good one."

Long Process

At such time as there may be a U.S. troop withdrawal, the Marine leader said, "It's going to take months and months—regardless of the political or military situation."

This is because "there's just so damn much gear there" to be removed, Chapman said.

The United States now has about 535,000 men, including some 80,000 Marines, in South Vietnam and has built up a huge supply and logistics base.

The Marine commandant agreed with Clifford's judgment that North Vietnamese violations of the demilitarized zone do not yet constitute a significant danger to U.S. forces in the northern area of South Vietnam.

"There have been many hundreds of small incidents—sightings of two or three men, occasionally a single gun emplacement, one or two rounds fired once in a while," Chapman said.

"I don't think that any of these things, individually or the total bag collectively, can at this point be considered significant or grounds for concluding that they've broken the agreement and we should resume the bombing."

In Chapman's judgment, the total halt to the bombing of North Vietnam has not yet created a serious disadvantage to allied forces in South Vietnam or advantage to the enemy.

On the Way to the Top

Kennedy Following Johnson Path, Muskie on JFK Road

By JACK BELL
AP Political Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Behind the election of Sen. Edward M. Kennedy to a Senate Democratic leadership post is the developing story of his reversal of the tactics his brother, John F. Kennedy, used in winning the presidency.

The 36-year-old Massachusetts senator, survivor of the three Kennedy brothers who have been outstanding figures in American politics in the '60s, has chosen the not always rewarding climb up the Senate political ladder.

In taking over the No. 2 spot as Democratic whip, or assistant leader, Kennedy is casting possible future presidential ambitions in the same mould that Sen. Lyndon B. Johnson found was faulty in 1960.

Relied on Prestige

As majority leader then, Johnson tended the Senate store. He relied heavily on his prestige as the second most powerful man in government in the Eisenhower administration to bring him his party's presidential nomination.

Sen. John F. Kennedy went hunting for convention votes out where the ducks are—in the country. And he wound up with the prize.

If there is a parallel, it does not stop there.

Sen. Edmund S. Muskie of Maine, the 1968 Democratic vice-presidential nominee, is taking the road that John F. Kennedy traveled from 1956 to 1960 toward the presidency.

Muskie probably could have been named whip if he chosen to chance the contest against defeated Sen. Russell B. Long of Louisiana.

Rely on Firends

He decided instead to keep himself free to roam the country and talk to the "national constituency" his friends tell him he won in last year's campaign.

While Kennedy is laboring in the legislative fields helping produce a party record, Muskie will be free to do considerably more flitting about to Democratic fund-raising affairs.

There he will have the opportunity to get on a first-name basis with the men influential in choosing convention delegates.

If the Democrats need any reminder that this can be an effective play, they have only to look at the record of Richard M. Nixon's exhaustive wooing of local Republicans.

The whip job, of course, is neither so important or confining as that of majority leader. It is not on record that his duties as No. 2 man ever interfered when Long decided his presence was needed in Louisiana or elsewhere.

But as Democratic leader, Mike Mansfield of Montana observed, Edward M. Kennedy is a "Senate man," as John F. Kennedy and Robert F. Kennedy never were before him.

Kennedy has a name among his colleagues for always doing his home work on legislation. That doesn't leave a great amount of time for junketing about the world to familiarize himself personally with international problems—a liability Johnson could not shake in 1960.

The Massachusetts senator already has all but abandoned plans for an early trip to Asia. He has pointed himself toward a great deal of personal activity in the fields covered by the Labor-Education and Judiciary Committees of which he is a member.

With his election as whip, Kennedy gained ex-officio membership on the seven-man Policy Committee which Mansfield, as chairman, plans to make a major vehicle in drafting a legislative program.

Kennedy also will be on the 17-member Democratic Steering Committee, also headed by Mansfield, which parcels out choice standing committee assignments.

The Massachusetts senator will be within the inner circle and those who know him best think he will make the most of it.

'King-Sized Hangover'

World Suffering From Over-Done Vegetables

LONDON (AP) — A leading British nutritionist says the world is suffering from what he called "a kingsized hangover" because "everyone is boiling away the essential vitamins from vegetables."

Dr. Geoffrey Taylor says, a retired army doctor and former professor of medicine in Lahore, Pakistan, has persuaded a British government department to investigate his claims.

After carrying out tests on German steelworkers in Dueseldorf and discussions with nutritional experts in the United States, Austria, Yugoslavia, Czechoslovakia and Israel, Taylor is convinced the problem is worldwide.

"There are general signs of mental and physical fatigue and slackness among all age groups," he said. "Prime offenders in this overcooked age are the canteens of offices, factories, hospitals, schools and universities."

"It is quite possible that some examination failures are caused through students being short of vitamins and suffering mental fatigue."

Taylor said his investigations indicated that more than 2 million old people in Britain are suffering from vitamin deficiency.

He claimed evidence indicates a possible link between vitamin deficiency and illnesses such as peptic ulcers and heart disease. Early symptoms of vitamin deficiency apart from the fatigue, include discomfort in the mouth, soreness of the tongue, and small scaly patches on the skin.

His cure for that hangover? "Fresh vegetables should never be boiled for more than 10 minutes and then should be eaten immediately."

Reseated Powell Will Fight For Return of House Power

NEW YORK (AP)—Rep. Adam Clayton Powell said Saturday he would try to regain some of the powers he held as chairman of the House Education and Labor Committee by authoring a resolution that would put him in charge of an antipoverty task force.

Powell flew back to his Harlem constituency hours after the House voted to give him back his seat, fined him $25,000 and stripped him of his seniority. He called a news conference at the Abyssinian Baptist Church, which he heads, and appeared for it wearing a gold medalion over a black turtle neck sweater and dark sport coat.

Under House rules, he said, the author of a resolution automatically becomes chairman of a committee it sets up. But the Negro preacher-politician did not discuss what powers he planned to give himself or the success he thought such a move would have.

Charge Against Program
Powell charged that the federal poverty program was "not making an impact in a number of areas in the country."

Before he was excluded from the House two years ago, Democrat Powell, 60, carried considerable weight as chairman of an important committee and possessor of 22 years seniority. He lost the chairmanship and the seniority when he was excluded.

He was re-elected twice by his Harlem constituents before he was reelected Friday by a vote of 261 to 160. He also has won approval from the Supreme Court to hear his arguments.

(that the House did not have the authority to oust him.)

Powell said the House Republican leadership had reversed itself before it decided to fine him. He said that Republican leaders called him Thursday night and told him that he could count on at least 35 Republican votes in favor of seating him.

He said the Republicans changed their minds because "they wanted to revive the grand old coalition of Republicans and Southern conservatives."

The Harlem congressman said he would be making "just $400 a month after deductions for the monthly $1,150 fine." He said he could get $1,400 a month pension if he retired.

"But the people of Harlem have not had representation in two years and I want to give it to them," Powell said.

52 Killed in Crash At English Airport

GATWICK, England (AP) — An Afghan Airways Boeing 727 with 67 persons on board crashed and burned after trying to land in fog at Gatwick Airport, south of London early Sunday.

An ambulance service said 52 persons were dead.

Fifteen persons were said to have been pulled out of the wreckage alive and rushed to Redhill General Hospital, 10 miles away. About half were later transferred to Queen Victoria hospital, East Grinstead.

Police said the aircraft demolished a house but missed a housing development close by.

Esteem of French for Jackie Unchanged by Marriage to Onassis

PARIS (AP)—The esteem of the French people for Jacqueline Kennedy apparently was not changed by her marriage to Aristotle Onassis.

A poll by the French Institute of Public Opinion for the newspaper France-Soir, published Saturday asked the question: "What woman living today do you admire the most?"

Mrs. Onassis placed second, the same position she held in the poll last year. Mrs. Indira Gandhi, India's prime minister, was first both years.

Comfort Enhances Ranch Design

Design Z-74 has a living room, dining room, kitchen, breakfast area, laundry, family room, foyer, three bedrooms, two baths and a lavatory on the first floor, totaling 1985 square feet. If the partial attic is finished with two bedrooms and a bath, as included in the plans, it provides 768 additional square feet of habitable area. The two-car garage has extra storage space. Over-all dimensions, which include the garage, are 69 feet 4 inches by 51 feet 5 inches.

By Andy Lang
One of the most important aspects of good design is the achievement of proper balance in relation to room size.

The size of certain rooms, most especially the kitchen, should be affected by the total number of rooms in a house. For example, to support a five-bedroom house, the breakfast area should logically be large enough to accommodate a dinette table and eight chairs.

In this 1½ story house (actually more of a ranch with an attic over the rear portion), architect Herman H. York has carried out that concept. Because it has three bedrooms on the first floor and two more upstairs, the kitchen is spacious enough to handle a sizable family. In addition to the usual complement of modern appliances, it has a corner double sink overlooking the rear yard; an island counter and sink for convenient food preparation; a large breakfast space with two double-hung windows providing light and view; and a 5-foot-long pantry with storage shelving.

The kitchen is accessible to the front foyer, the dining room and the family room, with a door leading to the cellar stairs. Adjoining the kitchen is the laundry area, with the washer and dryer concealed behind a pair of bi-fold doors.

foyer entrance and cafe doors leading to the family room, with the opposite wall enhanced by wood paneling and an attractive fireplace. To the far end are windows and a door to an outside terrace.

The living room, to the left of the foyer, is 22' long in the popular L arrangement with the dining room. A lavatory just off the foyer makes a convenient powder room for guests.

The three bedrooms on the main floor are good-sized, with the master bedroom 17' 8" in length. It has a dressing alcove with lavatory, a shower, water closet and bidet, and a built-in mirror in a carpeted area. The Both bathrooms have windows. A long linen closet, with five shelves, is directly opposite the hall bath.

Upstairs are two large rooms designated in the plans as bedrooms, but which could be used as dens, study areas or hobby rooms. In fact, the entire area could stay unfinished if not needed and would be ideal for major storage purposes. A bathroom with its own rear dormer could be built immediately or at a later time.

Outside, Design Z-74 combines brick with wood shingles in a traditional appearance. Under the windows on the bedroom wing and the two-car garage are flower boxes.

The Large Living Room, with multi-paned windows, has easy access to the second floor along the stone-floored foyer. Sliding doors allow privacy when wanted. A dining area adjacent to the living room provides space for comfortable formal entertaining.

Large Rooms Provide Space for a family with three bedrooms downstairs and two upstairs besides a sizable kitchen and breakfast area. The living and dining area and a family room open onto a terrace which is especially well-suited for informal entertaining.

Brick Is Combined with wood shingles in this expansive design of this traditional ranch. Shuttered, multi-paned windows and low separated roof lines with an attic over only a portion of the main floor produces the relaxed atmosphere associated with easy country living.

He Was No Leonardo Obscure Artist Porter 'Reborn'

By MILES A. SMITH
AP Arts Editor

NEW YORK (AP) — Through a new book and an art exhibit, a forgotten painter of the American primitive school, who also was an inventor and a man well ahead of his time, has been brought back from virtual oblivion.

This man was Rufus Porter. Born in 1792. Deceased 1884—long life filled with creative and germinal ideas.

As an artist he was no Leonardo da Vinci. He was selftaught; his portraits were crude. His eventual specialty, mural painting, was too naive to attract attention from serious students of American art. But like Leonardo, he was full of ideas for the future—even flying machines.

As both artist and inventor, he never held a candle to such

For First Six Months Paine's 1969 Shows Range From Beer Steins to Op-Art

OSHKOSH — The Paine Art Center, which recorded an attendance of nearly 26,000 persons during 1968, today announced its exhibition schedule for the first six months of 1969.

Richard Gregg, the Art Center's executive director, said the forthcoming shows represent variety and quality and are "perhaps slightly off-beat".

Events planned through June 29 begin with "A Selection of Paintings, Drawings and Islamic Carpets from the Permanent Collection", Jan. 5-28. Art objects on display include many collected by Mr. and Mrs. Nathan Paine, founders of the center, during the 1920s, 1930s and 1940s.

Architectural drawings of the Center's English period rooms and decorative fixtures, all designed especially for the building, will also be shown.

"Victorian Needlework", covering homecrafts for 19th century American and England, will be on display Feb. 1-23. The show was organized by the Division of Textiles of the Smithsonian Institution, and is being circulated nationally.

March 1 through 25 the Art Center will display "A retrospective Exhibition of Watercolors by Gerhard Miller". Paintings for the exhibit of work by Miller, whose single theme is the natural landscape centered around his native Sturgeon Bay, are being borrowed from private sources throughout Wisconsin, and will include an essential number of works from Miller's private collection.

"Op-art by Anusiewicz", a lively show by a leader in the new movement of "op-art" or "perceptual abstraction", Richard Anusiewicz, will be on display March 29-May 4. About 25 of the 39-year-old artist's paintings and serigraphs will be shown, all borrowed from public and private sources in Akron (O.), Chicago, Detroit, Madison, Milwaukee and New York City.

"Beer Steins and Tankards — an Historic Survey" is scheduled for May 10-June 29. The primary lender to this exhibition is Rene von Schleitnitz, of Milwaukee, who owns one of the largest collections of antique steins in America. Close to 300 drinking containers will be in the show, some dating from the 17th century.

In his announcement Gregg pointed out that the Paine, a privately-supported educational and cultural institution, is now entering its 21st year of existence. During the past few years, it has gained state and national attention due to several noteworthy special exhibits it has organized.

a celebrated contemporary as Samuel F. B. Morse—a leading painter of the day, and inventor of the telegraph. Porter was doomed to obscurity, largely because he never was able to carry his ideas to fruition.

Porter's unusual story is contained in "Rufus Porter, Yankee Pioneer," by Jean Lipman, the art editor, researcher and authority on primitive American art, who spent many years digging out the story of the man and his works. The book has been published by Clarkson N. Potter Inc., at $12.50, with 22 color plates and 102 black and white illustrations.

Concurrently, there is a small exhibit at the Whitney Museum of American Art of a set of 10 wall paintings Porter did for a house in Westwood, Mass., which were rescued when the house was demolished.

Porter was a wanderer. In his youth he was an itinerant jack-of-all-trades. In his adult years he was an itinerant portrait painter and mural painter, always sparing part of his time to dream up new inventions.

In the beginning, opportunistically, he did nearly everything. Apprentice shoemaker, fife player, fiddler, teacher, painter of houses and signs, operator of a dancing school, trader on a trip to the Northwest and Hawaii, he eventually turned to portrait work. In his later years he decorated scores of houses and inns in New England, many of which no longer survive.

As an inventor he was no slouch. He patented many devices, but others he sold off for cash. One was a revolving rifle which later became the famous series of Colt weapons. That idea he sold to Samuel Colt for $100.

As early as 1834 he proposed an airship of the type which many years later would be called a dirigible. He tried for years to promote the idea; he built a small model that actually flew. In 1849 (the year of the California gold rush) he proposed a venture to carry passengers from East Coast to West Coast in three days. His ideas also included a horseless carriage, elevated railroad, portable and prefabricated houses and various agricultural implements.

He also was a pioneering journalist. He founded, and very briefly was the first editor of, "Scientific American," and had a part in several other scientific journals.

But all through his long career of idea-making, Porter relied mainly on portraits and wall paintings for his bread and butter.

A Bent Toward the Bold is evident in almost all of Sister Mariella's work. Her two favorite pieces, above, are both cast in aluminum. A corpus, suspended on a cross of scrap pine, and a chalice will be included in her master's exhibit. Below, the Good Shepherd, is made of slabs of clay and is on permanent exhibit at Alverno College.

As Mrs. Lipman reports in her book, "had he not so inadequately promoted his innovations and so casually disposed of them he would surely have gone down in history as one of the greatest American inventors. Instead, he became a kind of mechanical Johnny Appleseed, sowing the seeds of new and ingenious ideas as he traveled his way through New England and scattering them abroad through his journals."

As an artist, Porter must be judged as an interesting example of those primitive painters who gave American art of the 19th century a vigorous, indigenous flavor. With this rediscovery of his contribution to this field, it may still be possible to save some of the New England buildings that contain his works.

Sister Mariella Erdmann, a teacher at Xavier High School, displays some of the prints and pencil sketches which grace the school office as well as the sisters' house. Many of her works already have been sold by the Franciscan Sisters of Christian Charity, Manitowoc, of which she is a member.

Franciscan Sister Mariella Young Nun Expresses Faith Through Artworks

BY MAIJA PENIKIS
Post-Crescent Staff Writer

Religion has always been a popular subject in art but a young Appleton artist expressed her faith almost exclusively through her works.

Bold and heavy in appearance, the artist's sculptures, paintings and graphics, so reminiscent of the masters of the late Middle Ages whose dramatic pieces decorate many a prominent church, belie the fact that she is a woman.

Sister Mariella Erdmann, a member of the order of the Franciscan Sisters of Christian Charity, Manitowoc, and an art teacher at Xavier High School, concentrates almost exclusively in the area of religion.

"People always are surprised when they learn that the works have been done by a woman," said the slender young nun, adding, "I've always disliked dainty things."

This "if you have something to say, say it" attitude is evident in her work, which leans heavily toward sculpture. All of her smaller works, such as jewelry, have been done in required classes.

"I feel that in religious art the works have to be dramatic to illustrate the power and glory of God," Sister Mariella explained.

Her works speak for themselves. Slabs of clay have been used in a number of her sculptures. A favorite piece, a heavy chalice, often used in masses in the sisters' chapel, is carved from a styrofoam block and cast in aluminum.

This new method, with which the sister experimented this past summer, also produced a corpus suspended on a cross made of scrap pine.

Both works were completed as part of her work for her masters' degree in art at Siena Heights College, in Michigan, and both will be included in her masters' show.

The one surprising aspect, perhaps unknown to the cheerful artist herself, is the fact that all her works are wrapped in wistfulness.

The Good Shepherd, a sculpture made of clay slabs, has the burden of the ages in the eyes of the man. Another styrofoam carving has a slender St. Francis longingly reaching for the heavens.

The eyes in her works, especially, display a sadness, a fact completely incongruent to the young nun, whose explanations are all accompanied by enthusiastic gestures of the hands, an indication of her love for life.

Because Sister Mariella, a native of Green Bay, comes from a family which has looked at art as a natural part of family life, she has seemed to be unaware of her talent up to now, and had been unable to evaluate her earlier works.

The Good Shepherd, which she claims as her favorite, graces the gallery at Alverno College in Milwaukee, where she studied for her first degree in art.

"They have a right to keep one piece by each of their students, but I do wish it hadn't been that one," said the artist wistfully, then added with a laugh, "Actually, I do know what the head of the department had in mind when I started working with the sculpture, but it was too big to hide."

About 40 of her other earlier works have been sold by the order. Her latest efforts, however, are being stored away for her masters' exhibit but many are on display at Siena Heights College.

Despite the many offers to buy her works, Sister Mariella is not selling any, at least not until after her exhibit. She is, however, obviously and rightfully proud and happy the works are drawing some attention.

An especially nice highlight to the artists' career is the inclusion of her works in an art calendar-catalog, which commemorates the order's 200th anniversary.

Bloom Show To Open Soon

RACINE — A one-man show of oil paintings by William Bloom. Twin Lakes, Wis., artist, will be on view at the Charles A. Wustum Museum of Fine Arts, 2519 Northwestern Ave., today through Jan. 26.

A meet-the-artist reception will be held from 2 to 5 p.m. today. Bloom's work has been exhibited widely throughout Wisconsin. In 1967 he had a one-man show at the Bergstrom Art Center, Neenah.

CALLING ALL HOME MAKERS
By Henry Patzner
LET OUR DECORATOR CONSULTANTS ASSIST YOU!

Did you ever stop to think about the variety and selection of furniture that's available these days? Many people really aren't aware of all the exciting things that have been going on in the furniture business.

Let's talk about lamps for a moment. When you say "lamps" to some people they think only of floor lamps and table lamps. But there are chain lamps, pole lamps, tree lamps and desk lamps in every style and price range.

Do you need a new cocktail table? (Some call them coffee tables). They are available with marble tops, plastic tops, wood tops in every finish, glass tops, and in every shape from round to oblong.

A chair? There are new lounge chairs, reclining and swivel chairs, pull-up chairs, dinette and desk chairs, to name just a few.

At no obligation, we will be happy to show you furniture to fit your needs and your budget.

But whether you need new furniture now or not, you're still invited to come in and simply look around. We think you'll find it exciting to see all the different kinds of furniture — and furniture ideas — now available. We'll be looking forward to seeing you.

New Push Likely To Extend Jobless Compensation Law

BY JOHN WYNGAARD
MADISON—The announcement that with the turn of the new year the state has universal coverage of all employees under the workmen's compensation law probably heralds another attempt to broaden coverage under the unemployment compensation law as well.

Until this year only employers of three or more persons were required to provide workmen's compensation, although the statute requiring such protection for others is more than half a century old.

Under unemployment compensation, only employers with four or more employees are covered and required to contribute to the job insurance fund. Repeated attempts have been made by advisory committees, with the support of business and industrial groups, to persuade the legislature to broaden such coverage, without favorable response thus far. One evident reason is that many members of the legislature are employers of a few persons, such as lawyers, and are not especially anxious to add to the cost of their payrolls by enacting such universal coverage.

W. Jerome Higgins, for a quarter of a century the beloved proprietor of the state capitol's cigar and refreshment concession, recently retired to Florida. This week he received as a tribute from his friends a fat bound volume of letters of reminiscence and tribute, signed by former governors and incumbent high officials, supreme court judges, leading legislators, and ranging through the ranks of clerks and sergeants in the legislature he served so cheerfully and so long. Mr. Higgins is blind.

The heavy snow and ice storms of recent days handicapped Wisconsin highway travellers considerably, but they also drew attention to the enormous expansion of snow removal and ice prevention work of the state highway administration through contracts with county highway departments in recent years. Two decades ago storms such as those of last week would have tied up travel for days. Today keeping the main highways clear is regarded as a function of the highway department as basic as keeping them in repair during the rest of the season.

Will Jerris Leonard, the retiring state senate Republican floorleader and recent nominee for U.S. senator, go to Washington as a member of the staff of U. S. Attorney General-Designate John Mitchell? This much can be said: he could join the Mitchell staff if he chose to do so. The men are good friends, partly as a result of the fact that Mitchell, a specialist in public bonds as a lawyer, was occasionally retained by the state building corporations while Leonard served on the state building commission.

But the guessing among seemingly informed persons is that Leonard will choose to retain his place in his Milwaukee law partnership.

Close friends of Gov. Knowles recently joined in purchasing an original painting which caught his eye when he visited an exhibit at Stout State University a few months ago. The artist is Josh Salter, son of the celebrated former teacher of political science at the University of Wisconsin. The initiative for the gift came from a fraternity of hunting and fishing friends of which the governor has been a member for many years, and is now president. It is called the Piscatorial and Inside Straight Society.

Sen. William Proxmire, a handy man with a press release, is accelerating the tempo of his publicity mailings as the new congressional session is about to begin. While it is early for the ordinary voter to be thinking about such matters, the senior senator constantly has in mind the fact that in 1970 his term will expire, and he can be expected to step up the pace of his week-end Wisconsin campaigning activity also.

If there is a serious attempt in the new legislature to improve the law-enforcement machinery of the state, as Attorney General-elect Robert Warren of Green Bay has predicted, it will be difficult to avoid an issue that has been known to legislators for years, but which they have avoided thus far because of its political volatility.

It is the question of coordinating, or joining, the state and county highway patrols for most efficient and productive distribution over the state. But the courthouse leaders of the state have always been hostile toward the idea, and the most that any state administration has been able to achieve is a kind of joint advisory committee for the discussion of mutual problems and arrangements for informal collaboration.

The only frontal approach on the subject was made during the Kohler administration more than a decade ago, when it was suggested that the county police be incorporated into the state patrol. It went down in a smashing chorus of nay votes in the legislature.

The disclosure that county tax rates for the state as a whole rose by a negligible two cents per $1,000 this year may serve to take some of the edge off the claim of state administration critics that it has been responsible for local property tax rises.

In the face of the general boosts in municipal tax levies, moreover, the more fortunate position of the counties may give more emphasis to the idea of broadening the taxing base of some local services and facilities by transferring them to county jurisdiction, which has been the thrust of some of the more thoughtful discussions by members of the Tarr task force on local government finance and organization lately.

With Rep. Melvin Laird's declaration that he does not intend to resign his seat until his nomination as Secretary of Defense in the Nixon administration is confirmed, it is virtually certain that the special congressional election in his seventh Wisconsin district won't be held until the regular spring voting in April.

Gov. Knowles is entitled to call the special election when he chooses, but he must also assume that time will be required for a primary as well as a final balloting. Thus if the congressman vacates his seat late in January, an unscheduled election date choice would fall so close to the regular April election as to raise the point of unnecessary costs for such balloting.

One of the major appointments facing Gov. Knowles as he enters his third term results from the scheduled expiration of the term of Russell G. Lynch as a member, and current chairman, of the board of natural resources which directs policy for the big, consolidated state department of natural resources.

The impression prevails that Lynch, a retired newspaper editor who lives at Wauwatosa, will probably be reappointed.

His new term will also open the way to the governor to put his own men in a number of important seats occupied by survivors of the Democratic regimes which preceded his election in 1964.

Among the best-known of such Democratic hold-overs are the two Rice brothers of Sparta, Zel Rice, a member of the state employment relations board, and John Rice, a member of the Coordinating Committee for Higher Education. Knowles has yet given no hint of his intentions.

One of the improvements in the state legislature's machinery in recent years for which the growing corps of statehouse correspondents is grateful is the reservation and equipment of the first state capitol press work room since the capitol was built more than half a century ago. Such facilities are common in major public buildings elsewhere, but Wisconsin officials for years were reluctant to acknowledge it.

Fashion philosophy softens for spring

BY JACKIE KRUG
Post-Crescent Fashion Editor

The season has come to relax and enjoy it. Fashion, that is. American designers are softies for spring 1969. The lines are soft, the fabrics are soft, the colors are soft, and even the philosophy is soft.

The predictions of what will fill milady's closet and empty her husband's pocketbook came out last week in semi-annual showings sponsored by the New York Couture Business Council. American Designer Series spring shows get underway this week in the U. S. fashion capital.

If there's any sort of distinctive philosophy for the New Year, it's that what matters more than the clothes, is the woman inside them. She is encouraged to be an individual, which may already sound a bit old hat, but this is the first season American designers have given in fully to the idea.

The New Rule is that there are no rules outside of personal taste. The movement began last fall with the "pulled together look;" the hippie fad, now dead, had something to do with it as did the growing importance of individual freedom of expression. Apparently the active American woman gave the idea her vote of confidence — and her dollars — and designers have responded with a greater emphasis on the theme.

Extension of Personality

Personal taste and the human body are, then, the only influence American designers recognize for spring 1969. The new, greater softness is an extension of the original in softness — the female body. Fashion itself will be the extension of the wearer's personality.

The emphasis on form began in earnest with last year's push for the belted look and the return of the waistline. It continues this year in a relaxed fashion with a shaped body released for movement. Clothing for spring relaxes on the body, moving freely to suggest rather than outline.

The sporty flavor of day wear is making big noises. It's not entirely new. But, again, the American woman approved of what she was offered along that line last year and the designers dished up a bigger helping for her this time around.

Although the pants takeover is not the only thing that points to this new emphasis on sporty things, it certainly is the most noticeable. The freshest are pants paired with dresses. Shirty little dresses are worn over flared pants, cuffed or not. The mini dresses, of course, can go it alone depending on your mood. The American woman will wear pants a lot, but not always, and never if they don't suit her.

Jumper a Favorite

An across-the-board favorite for spring with designers in both the New York Couture group and the American Designer Series is the jumper outline. The new silhouette plays strict slimness against full, contrasting sleeves. Jumpers may be U-necked, V-necked, tightly belted or loosely wrapped.

The blouson silhouette is being redone in a fuller, softer look that is not confined to the bodice alone. Shoulders stay narrow and the body shirt has relaxed to the newer blouson. Tucking, pleating and gathers from yokes are important here. A fuller bodice that hints at shape falls gently to the belting. The look of blouson goes hand in hand with the freshly eased

This soft pink costume, touched with crisp white, is a Don Breitingger design for Harold Levine shown last week during the New York Couture Business Council spring press week in New York. The easy dress in silk and worsted has a front panel pleat and a waistline sashed in white leather. The cover-up is the molded double-buttoned shorter jacket for 1969. Delicate silk chiffon in soft tones of green and orange form the background for this shirt dress, at right, designed by Philippe Tournaye for Mort Schraeder and also previewed by the press during the Couture group showings.

Evening wear for spring 1969 will be sexy and seductive. Stan Herman of Mr. Mort suggests this sarong with a deep plunge neckline worn over matching pants. The costume is a good example of the feminine softness prevailing in fashion for the new season.

Morton Myles of Jeunesse is just one of the designers predicting the blouson look on the American spring fashion scene. Above, he uses white crepe in a bloused bodice above a splurge of pleats. A black floppy bow, neckline and hemline bands add contrast. At right, pants for evening have gone sophisticated — so sophisticated they look like a dress. This dinner costume is by Kasper for Joan Leslie. The fabric is black, red, and white silk print.

attitude toward waists — the new elasticized waist, the softer sashes, wraps, ties and crushed belts.

Evening dress, the designers tell us, will be extravagant and sexy, although they allow us the alternative of "dress" or "don't dress," again according to mood. Plunging necklines, bared or laced backs and open midriffs are the predictions of the New York Couture group. The shirt, long or short, in a blouson look with flowing sleeves and skirts tells the most important of the "covered up" stories.

There is another pants story for evening. Ultra soft, slinky or voluminous, the pant goes to new widths from supplest, barely widened legs to gathers and gathers that look like skirts.

Although there doesn't appear to be any great "newness" in fashion for spring, all things point to a good year. The general feeling seems to be that it is time for the American woman to become a participant in fashion rather than the object of the designers' dictates. This can only be a healthy development for both the woman who buys clothes and the man who must sell them.

Slithering 'S' Marks Fashion

JEAN SPRAIN WILSON
NEW YORK (AP) — S is the first letter in the word Sex and somehow it is the most sensual in the alphabet.

Starting with S are sights and sounds that stimulate the senses.

Take soft, supple and sheer, or wispy, or silky, or satiny, or sleeky, or sultry, or even steamy. All suggest seduction and sirens and sin.

This is the style of the sexy '60s.

'Shape of Fashion'
The shape of fashion, he says, is the shape of the woman within the fashion idea. Neither darts nor padding should create curves. Get the body and the fabric together, assuming that each has something going for it, and sex appeal will take care of itself, believes Haggins.

Hence he chooses fabrics that are soft, flowing and drapable such as matte jerseys, and crepes of Enkasure nylon and chiffon. Dresses are unlined. All are cut close and cling to the body.

Colors are bright or stark white and designs are often the purist of simplicity, like classic togas or Tahitian sarongs.

Necklines plunge; skirts or pants are full, and yet the fabric is not bulky, rather supple and slinky.

In a word it's sexy. In a letter it is S.

'Gorgeous Scrap of History' Retrieved From River Wey

The ghost of Lord Nelson, the most famous of British naval heroes, seems to loom high above the crowds that gather at the Chertsey Museum in Surrey, England, to see his diamond scabbard — which was found last April at the bottom of a river.

Fred Besch, 27-year-old British electrical engineer who found the scabbard when skindiving in the river Wey near his home in Surrey, has loaned it to the museum, as the safest place for the time being.

Mr. Besch, who, after months of litigation, recently was awarded title to the historic scabbard, says he wants to sell it because "it is too valuable and dangerous for me to keep."

Part of the scabbard still is missing. The portion found by Mr. Besch is called the locket, that fastens the scabbard to the belt. It is 22-karat gold and studded with 363 small diamonds. A jeweler has estimated it worth at about $2,000.

Sentiment Ups Price

However, the name Horatio Nelson rings ship's bells in the heart of every true Englishman and every true lover of the sea. The fact that the diamond scabbard was his sends its price up to at least $12,000. Mr. Besch refuses to say how much he has been offered (or hopes to be offered) for it. He did say one collector has offered to exchange a $13,200 house for it.

The jeweled relic was identified by Commander Edward May, an expert on Nelson's swords and deputy director of the National Maritime Museum. A Turkish star-and-crescent design of diamonds is set within an oval of diamonds on a background of delicate blue enamel. This motif is surrounded by ribbon-shapes and swirls of diamonds on rose enamel. The star-and-crescent design convinces Captain May that this was the sword presented to Nelson by the Sultan of Turkey after his victorious Battle of the Nile.

'Hot' Merchandise

How did this treasure get to the bottom of the river Wey? Commander May pointed out that the river is near Merton, where Lord Nelson lived with his mistress, Lady Hamilton. She lived there alone after he was killed in the Battle of Trafalgar in 1805, and it is well known that she frequently was in debt. Commander May believes she sold the sword, giving a fake to Alexander Davidson, the friend to whom Nelson had willed it.

The sword's buyer then found himself with "hot" merchandise. Several large diamonds were forced from the center of the scabbard's locket. May believes the purchaser then found it expedient to retire the rest of the relic to the river.

This weapon was only one of many ceremonial swords given to Nelson in his days of glory, and it was only one of many diamond tributes. The Turkish Sultan, for example, also gave him a diamond star-and-crescent for his tunic, and a diamond star with a white plume for his hat. And the King and Queen of Naples — where he met Lady Hilton, then wife of the British Ambassador — gave him their portrait — medallions bordered in diamonds.

Romantic Personality

Lord Nelson, as the lines at the Chertsey Museum show all over again, is one of the most fascinating personalities in history, with something to capture the imagination of almost everyone.

Generations of schoolboys have been enchanted to read that he went to sea at the age of 12, and never was away from it long the rest of his life. They have read that some of the most daring exploits in his career were achieved in the years after he lost an eye in one battle, and an arm in another. And they love the story of the time he was given a stupid battle order to turn his ship around just when he knew that if he pressed a little bit further he would win. Nelson raised his telescope to receive the signal all right — but he put it to his blind eye.

Women see him as the hero of a love story. Serious historians deplore what they feel was an unwise attachment to a woman without honor. But when has wisdom ever had anything to do with love? And women only know that Nelson loved Lady Hamilton madly and completely.

Place in History

The serious historians, however, have enough without a history that few men, even love story. Nelson's tactical brilliance and his ability to unite and lead his men give him a place of honor in heroes, have achieved.

Good Grooming Calls for Weekly Shampoo
Unless you're looking for a job in a rock 'n roll combo, forget about way-out hair styles. Keep your hair trimmed, keep it clean, keep it combed. Shampoo at least once every week — or just as soon as your hair begins to get oily and dirty. Wet your hair and work up a good lather. Scrub hair and scalp with a brush or your finger tips, then rinse out all the suds. For a really great shampoo, go through the whole routine a second time. That's what good barbers do.

After a wedding trip to Florida and Alabama, the couple will reside in Kimberly.

Of Male Stewardesses In the Battle for Equality

By JOY MILLER
AP Women's Editor

In 1968 men made strides in their unceasing attempts to achieve equality with women.

In Washington the Equal Employment Opportunities Commission said a man can be as good an airline stewardess as a woman. The commission ruled that "sex wasn't a bona fide occupational qualification for the position of flight cabin attendant" and that an airline that refused to hire members of a particular sex to attend to passengers' needs violated the law.

Sec. Freeman Eased Burden Of Successor

Retiring Agriculture
Head Made Several Related Decisions

By DON KENDALL
AP Farm Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — When Clifford M. Hardin takes over from Secretary of Agriculture Orville L. Freeman on Jan. 20, the Nebraska educator will not be faced with a barrage of major decisions to make on this year's farm programs.

Freeman has already announced most of the big federal crop control programs for 1969, packaged neatly in the mold Democrats have been using since 1961.

The 1969 wheat program was announced last June 14; upland cotton on Nov. 18, and feed grains on Dec. 26. In addition, Freeman made major decisions affecting the government's dairy programs which are not set to expire until next spring.

In the case of wheat, the 1969 program required an early decision since most of the crop is planted in the fall for harvest the following year.

Cotton programs also are geared to early announcement, and farmers prefer that feed grains programs be revealed as early as possible so they can plan ahead.

But because of a near-record feed grains output in 1968, there had been widespread speculation that this year's program would be left to the Nixon administration, ostensibly to permit later production and consumption figures for 1969-70 projections.

Change of Plans

However, the total 1968 output of such crops as corn, sorghum grain, oats and barley declined toward the end of the year from earlier estimates, and this enabled Freeman to come up with what his advisers felt were easier terms.

The three major federal programs—which provide price supports and payments to farmers in return for acreage controls—are provided by the Food and Agriculture Act, which was extended by Congress last year to run through 1970.

This depends, of course, on whether Congress acts this year to alter the basic farm law.

But for now, it appears Hardin will be administering farm programs largely designed by the Democrats for this year.

Hardin, it appears, will have to decide on whether soybean price supports will be continued this year at $2.50 a bushel, or reduced—perhaps to $2.25—as some in the trade ask. Surplus stocks of soybeans are increasing, and the new secretary probably will have to tackle this soon with some kind of proposals to reduce production or stimulate exports.

Freeman probably has done his successor a big favor by deciding on some 1969 programs—particularly feed grains—since Hardin undoubtedly will be busy in the early weeks and months with departmental reorganization, appointments and feeling out the vast bureaucracy he has inherited.

Also, it will be tempting for Republican farm policy makers throughout the year to recall decisions made by Freeman and the Democrats should exports fall, new crops overflow the bins and prices drop.

The Nixon administration will be pressured to seek basic changes in farm policy, but even with immediate and overwhelming congressional support it isn't likely that far-ranging Nixon-Hardin programs will be forthcoming for this year's farm industry.

And if this does not emerge at all, under the present law, Hardin will be faced with similar decisions that have confronted Orville Freeman.

Double Duties

In a broad sense, Hardin will be required not only to administer Freeman programs this year but to begin soon plans to apply them through 1970 in the absence of drastically new legislation.

Freeman, while defending vigorously the Democratic farm programs, also has mentioned over the years that they have not worked perfectly, that farmers still require help to gain better incomes.

It is ironic, perhaps, that for 1969 and possibly through all of 1970 a Republican secretary of agriculture will be charged with making them work even better.

Post-Crescent Staff Writer

MENASHA — Often the most cherished gifts are those that cannot be purchased in a store, such as the one Mrs. Fred Relien made for her daughter-in-law, Mrs. Richard Relien, 132 Edna Ave., Menasha.

The senior Mrs. Relien, 240 Frederick St., Menasha, wife of a city fireman and an ardent liquid embroidery hobbyist, presented her newest daughter-in-law with a hand-painted and quilted spread using the theme of the 50 states with the flower of each included in the design.

Mrs. Relien had made quilts for another son's wife as a welcome to the family and for her daughter and her husband. Applique was used in the other projects, she said.

Pattern Ideas

Mrs. Relien said she took her idea for the design from embroidery transfer patterns but that she often uses coloring books as her inspiration and as guidelines.

She transferred the variously-colored state and flower designs to the 50 squares of white broadcloth material and began the painting in early fall.

Painting was the easiest part of the project, said Mrs. Relien. It was the measuring, cutting, matching, sewing and quilting that took the greatest amount of time.

The project was completed in about four months.

To compliment the embroidered squares, Mrs. Relien chose a blue and white checked gingham material

Secret Project

Other members of the family were included in the "secret project," and the younger Mrs. Relien by devious means was kept from the upstairs of the senior Relien home when visiting for fear she might see the quilting frame.

The frame had been set up in the room formerly occupied by Richard Relien before his marriage in June 1968. Because he was on duty in the service, and was not expected to return until close to the holidays, the room appeared to be the best place for the large frame.

"I was beginning to wonder why my mother-in-law was so funny about not wanting me to go Richard's former room to get some hunting equipment," said the younger Mrs. Relien.

Mystery Solved

Of course, the mystery about the "room-at-the-top-of-the-stairs" was solved when the young couple opened their gifts at Christmas.

The project was the largest in the liquid embroidery medium attempted by Mrs. Relien. She said she has no idea how many other articles she has made or decorated in the past four years, since she began fabric painting.

has worked on include pillowcases, baby quilts, children's clothing, tablecloths and towels. The art is adaptable to almost any materials, she said.

Sewing is another of Mrs. Relien's hobbies. She is a member of and is, or has been an officer, of the Germania Society, Bethel Guild and Vocational Homemakers.

Although she holds a part-time job, Mrs. Relien said she prefers being a homemaker above all other things.

Mama, Where Do Babies Come From?

BY ALICE HUCK
Post-Crescent Women's Editor

There are little boys and girls who start asking questions about sex about the age of three; a few voice their curiosity somewhat earlier; but most children begin to exhibit their more complicated to answer puzzlements somewhat later. All of them are fascinated by the subject, and the majority of child psychologists I have read say whenever your child asks his first question about this vital aspect of his life, it is time for you to answer.

A marvelous illustration of how confused children can be was expressed by an Edwards cartoon in the National Education Association Journal, November, 1967. The blackboard indicates "Sex Studies for Elementary Grades," and a startled teacher is confronted by two squirming youngsters. The little girl, whose hair bow barely raises above the top of the desk is asking, "Who is the opposite sex, Willie or me?"

Recalls Experience

This cartoon recalls a rather traumatic experience for me when I was an 18-year-old playground leader in Racine. Part of my job was to take the littlest boys and girls to the "bathroom," which in this case, of course, because of my sex, was the women's end of the building.

Most adults who have had charge of groups of children know, that when one has to "go," they all have to "go." This time I took the little girls and apprehensively left the little boys to wait.

An accident on a playground swing interrupted the procedure, and as I rushed out to the screams of "Miss Alice. . . Miss Alice. . ." evidently one of the urgent little boys rushed in to the restroom.

Calm Hysteria

As I tore back, having calmed the hysteria around the swings, a little boy came flying out of the restroom gasping, "Miss Alice, Miss Alice, Mary has. . ." In that short second I tried to remember an hour's lecture by our playground director on how to handle small fry, and weak with promonition, I heard him finish, "Mary. . . has new garters."

Just that one incident taught me to be prepared, for hardly ever is an adult on guard when the inevitable question comes up. Most of us know from comparing notes about our own childhood, the horror that can arise in a child's mind when a mother or father says the wrong thing at the wrong time.

Many books have been written, and a new one published by Time-Life Books in connection with General Learning and in consultation with the Sex Information and Education Council of the U.S. has

In an Associated Press interview with Joan Mebane, sex education editor of General Learning, Mrs. Mebane, told Joy Stille, there is nothing more normal and healthy than for young children to know the facts about how they came into the world.

Mrs. Mebane tested the new book, "How Babies Are Made" on her own children, a boy 9 and a girl, 6 years old. "Once they know about sex, children are matter-of-fact," she said, "and now, when television and publications treat the subject more openly, questions arise in the kids' minds sooner than ever before. Accurate information, frank and simple, is needed."

With candor and using the unusual medium of photographed fine paper sculptures, combined with extra large, short, type text, the book relates the story of sexual reproduction in a clear and graphic fashion intended both to dissipate some of the mystery that surrounds sex for young children and to satisfy the natural curiosity they have about it.

The book consists of 41 pages of color illustrations, each faced by a page of factual text. The art first shows how flowers are fertilized, then how animals mate, and finally how human beings conceive and bear their children. Textual descriptions are natural and use correct terminology.

One of the fine things about the text is that beginning even with the discussion of the birth of baby chicks, it uses the terms "mother" and "father," good words to impress upon the mind of a youngster with questions about reproduction.

"Where do babies come from?" is a question every parent eventually faces, and this book offers parents the starting point they so often grope for.

According to the authors, Andrew C. Andry and Steven Schepp, the book can be given to an older child to read, but it would seem better if a parent would take the time to read the book, page by page with the child.

If a parent can get by with it, it is suggested that a child's passing curiosity may be satisfied simply by showing him a single picture from the book and reading the accompanying text, but it is my observation a parent better be prepared, because once a child gets a peek at this book with its colorful, appealing illustrations, it will be difficult to pacify him with just a peek.

However, if a parent has studied the book, he could perhaps answer the first questions without bringing the book out until later.

I feel, when the book is shared with a child, it should be kept open as long as the child interest span is maintained.

"How Babies Are Made," by Andrew C. Andry and Steven Schepp, with illustrations by Blake Hampton, and published by Time-Life Books, is available at book and department stores at $3.95.

Chicago Market Promises New Trends, Innovations

A Venetian china cabinet by The Karges Furniture Co., Inc., has curvaceous 'bombe' styling. Shown above, in antique white finish with Venetian hand decoration, it is worked in Circassian walnut veneers and butternut solids. Three drawers are concealed behind the doors. At right, the magnificent collector's cabinet in Mediterranean styling is by Fancer Furniture Co. The surfaces are walnut; structural parts, pecan. The interior is illuminated; adjustable shelves are of glass.

CHICAGO — The January International Home Furnishings Market opens here today in the Merchandise Mart, American Furniture Mart and Exhibitors Building.

And with its opening comes predictions of trends. Spanish is expected to be firmly entrenched and out ahead of all other periods except Early American-Colonial.

Carol Hanson, Post-Crescent home furnishing editor, is in Chicago to cover the International Home Furnishings Market which runs today through Saturday.

nial-Federal. Although some call the period Spanish and others, Mediterranean, consumers will find the period bears the romantic aura of far-away places. Designs are rich and woody — free and fanciful in interpretation.

Mediterranean, according to the National Association of Furniture Manufacturers, will be seen in various modified forms in every price bracket and in every category from juvenile through living room, dining room, bedroom and outdoor furniture.

Updated Style
Early American has gained ground, too, with an updating in design and some small-scale groups for rooms with space limitations.

Metal has made its mark in new "groovy" modern designs. Steel, chrome and aluminum have been combined with glass, leather, vinyl, cane, rosewood and ebonized wood. Plexiglass and vinyl wrap will be seen for contrast to wood and for special effect.

Oriental is expected to reassert itself but mostly as a feeling or motif combined with the new contemporary. French provincial is making a bid to regain its former status as a perennial favorite — but mostly in the high style lines and with more embellishment. Also in the high style introductions will be Venetian Bombe' and 19th Century designs: French Directoire, French Empire, English Regency, Biedermeier and Victorian.

Woods in order of popularity are pecan, hickory, walnut and oak. Others making an appearance are cherry, maple, birch, elm, ash, mahogany and, in rarer instances, persimmon, pine, teak, acacia and wormy chestnut.

Super finishes on fine hardwoods that render them resistant to household hazards will be used freely. Most popular finishes will be the medium browns in both cool and warm tones. Some Mediterranean, especially where oak is used, will show a dark-tone finish.

Molded plastics for decorations and imprinting of wood graining as a replacement for wood veneers are more prevalent than before.

Velvets will be seen most frequently as covers for Mediterranean, traditional and some modern designs. Imported Belgium velvets in plain, striated, crushed, printed, and in cut and uncut versions are prevalent. Making style news are the suedes—real and simulated—the new chenille-type fabrics, simulated camel hair, heavy textured linens, the new end and end nylon warp matelasses in leaf pattern and the Vectra (an olefin fiber which has built in soil resistance). Important in vinyl are the new crushed leather look and the reptile-skin appearance.

A Pier Bookcase Etagere from Conant Ball Co., serves as both bookcase and room divider. In solid oak, finished on all four sides, the etagere can be used singly, in pairs or in greater numbers, according to the size of the room. Below, the "now" look from Selif Manufacturing Co., is achieved in this exciting swivel chair with its open cloverleaf chrome base from Sweden. Rosewood paneling or walnut is used for the back. It is cushioned in poly-dacron and covered in a choice of vinyl or fabric.

London Chain Store Caters To Princesses, Shopgirls

Sunday Post-Crescent C 9
January 5, 1969

LONDON (AP) — On her last visit to England, the Duchess of Windsor dropped into a London chain store and bought six pairs of shoes at $4.80 a pair. Princess Anne goes on shopping sprees in the same store; so does Princess Grace of Monaco. Princess Alexandra is such a regular customer that she invited the manager to her wedding.

The store is, of course, Marks and Spencer, or "Marks and Sparks," as the British affectionately call it. Its late chairman, Lord Simon Marks, used to say that he would never be content until every shopgirl could dress like a duchess. Now duchesses and shopgirls rub elbows at its counters, and The Sunday Times has credited M. & S. with doing more for the emancipation of women and the elimination of class-consciousness than all the efforts of politicians and reformers.

Branches in England
Hardly any of the clothes in the chain's 241 branches spread all over England cost more than $15. But nobody is ashamed of the St. Michael label that identifies a Marks and Spencer garment. The quality test that the store applies is: "It has to be good enough for our own directors and their families to wear."

At least four of the directors are millionaires. M. & S. can boast that this store takes in more money for every foot of floor space than any shop of any kind in the world. It's the branch where visiting royalty and dignitaries head to shop, and the one London tourist guides point out along with Buckingham Palace and St. Pauls.

The giant chain was started in 1884 as a penny bazaar stall in Leeds market by an uneducated Polish immigrant, Michael Marks. He took a friend, Tom Spencer, into partnership when Spencer offered to put up his entire capital to start a chain of stalls. Many of the present stores are on the sites of the original outdoor stalls.

Six hundred independent firms make all the products M. & S. sells. Knitwear is the firm's forte, and it sells 40 per cent of all the sweater dresses bought in England, a quarter of all knitwear, three-quarters of all ladies' slips, and 10 per cent of all clothing.

Fashionwise, "Marks and Sparks" does not go in for trendy gear. They do keep up with current styles, in a quietly classic way.

If the shop does not set any trends, it is interesting as an indication of what has percolated down from couture to the girl in the street. This time, full sleeves, white collars and cuffs, belts, pinafores, long vests, checks and stripes have—and Marks and Spencer avoid single-season ideas.

The chain employs 25,000 people, and claims to pick only one in five applicants. Their policy: "If you pay peanuts, you get monkeys."

Son of Famous Pair Seeks Niche in Life

JEAN SPRAIN WILSON
NEW YORK (AP) — If being the progeny of one famous parent is a handicap, then cherubic young Michael Reagan is twice cursed.

His mother is the winsome actress Jane Wyman and his father is former actor turned politician, Ronald Reagan.

"I told my mother that the greatest day in my life would be the time someone would brush past her and say to me, 'So you're the Michael Reagan I've been hearing about.'" the 23-year-old was saying between wardrobe changes for Hart Schaffner and Marx recently.

Rookie of Year
"And you know it actually happened? A waiter got excited at meeting me and I got great pleasure out of introducing him to the lady with me, my famous actress mother."

Michael's claim to fame at this point in his life was his derring-do as a boat racer. He had been named Rookie of the Year by the Southern California Marine association. Thanks to prize money and an income from working with auto and boat shows, he says, with the pride of a peacock, "I have been able to support myself since I was 18."

Now the Reagan lad has found a new scheme for making a niche for himself, that of bridging the current fashion generation gap.

Hired to Fit New Image

"It's really a public relations job," said Michael, explaining his new role with Hart Schaffner and Marx. "I model the clothes the firm makes for me, and I tell them what I think follows my age will go for, and meet the press, and things like that."

The nation's largest manufacturer of better-priced clothing hired Reagan as well as Wyatt Cooper (Gloria Vanderbilt's writer husband) to rid itself of a stodgy image.

Determined not to lose out to swifter menswear makers, as well as to the jazzy boutiques mushrooming everywhere, the three-name firm has accelerated its styling efforts by hiring nine designers to filter new ideas into its clothing line.

Mother's Designer Favorite

Among the designers are Luciano Franzoni, a Roman tailor; George Tankus and Olie Hammarsten of Stockholm; Eric Joy and Harry Reed of London; Jean Tronquet of Paris, and Alexander Soland, the former Swiss tailor who is now the firm's chief designer.

One designer on the team gives Michael a particular kick. Michael was wearing a nifty plaid suit and vest bearing the man's label. The designer is Jean Louis who has for years created glamorous costumes for another famous member of his family, his mother.

Wants to Be Himself

But for right now—and even though the public relations man for the firm's new public relations man sends telegrams to the press identifying Michael Reagan as the governor's son — Michael would prefer not to discuss either parent.

"I'm very proud to be their son," says the bachelor lad who lives in a singles apartment house in Van Nuys, Calif. "Each has made it doing what he likes best. I want to make it, too, but I want to be me."

Women Have Last Word

Some quotable quotes from women during the week:

"This house is a magnet, a crossroads of good conversation, for ideas, for stimulation. It is an exceedingly stimulating place. That I shall miss." Mrs. Lyndon Johnson in an interview dealing with her years in the White House.

"Each of us can put (the concept of brotherhood) into practice by treating one another with kindness and consideration at all times and in spite of every provocation."—Queen Elizabeth II in a Christmas Day speech.

"There is not one word in the dictionary that can describe how I feel today. I am so proud of my country that enabled my husband to carry out this mission. It's incredible to believe he's been there—the moon."—Mrs. James A. Lovell Jr. wife of one of three U.S. astronauts after their return from the Apollo 8 moon flight.

Everything happens when you're 18, and it's almost too much while it's going on, and then it's over too soon."—Dallas Pell, daughter of U.S. Sen.

Claiborne Pell, on the social whirl of a debutante.

"Thank you for my baby," — Actress Sophia Loren to her doctor on the birth of her first child.

Meeting Note

Charles O. Baer Auxiliary, United Spanish War Veterans, will meet for a 12:30 luncheon Thursday at the home of Mrs. Louis Schmidt, 825 N. Richmond St. A short business meeting is planned and cards will be played.

Bright Idea for Bedroom Beauty

Here's a bright new idea for bedroom beauty — a luxuriously fringed cotton bedspread with matching throw rugs! All cotton for safe washability, the ensemble comes in several sophisticated color combinations — with the spread available in twin or full size, and the rug a handy size for a washer and dryer.

Zesty Spices

Spices will stay their zestiest if the container is kept so scrupulously clean that competing stale odors are eliminated. Whenever one spice is used up, the others should be emptied separately onto wax paper. The entire container should be washed in hot soap or detergent suds, rinsed, dried thoroughly, then refilled.

Soap, Water Bath Perks Up Plants

Have your house plants taken on a tired and dingy look? Then what they need is the same thing you need when you look tired and dingy! A good soap and water bath! Dust, soot and fireplace ash are bound to deposit a film on the plant's leaves and it will stay there and collect more dust unless you literally wash it off.

Veteran gardeners know the merits of an occasional bath for house plants and have various methods of giving it. Probably the easiest way is simply to cover the dirt in the pot with waxed paper, and swab off each leaf with a sudsy sponge. Gentle handling, of course, is very important so the plant doesn't get bruised. Rinse each leaf carefully. Some people are so expert in handling plants they can tip them upside down into a pail of sudsy water without breaking off any new growth or otherwise harming the plant. But unless you are that skilled, better try our method. Ours takes longer but it is fool proof.

Happy marriage

Meeting favor with modern brides is the interlocking, engagement—wedding ring duo. You may select these in a variety of styles to suit every shape hand and personality. However, as in the traditional solitaire mounting, the center diamond should be your first concern. We will be happy to advise you on the "4 C's" of diamond value, and show you how slight variations in color and clarity may affect the price of your diamond. Do come in and see our collection first when shopping for this important diamond purchase.

Mrs. Agnew Chooses California Design

Helen Rose has been known for years for her shimmering array of chiffon and beaded evening gowns, a tradition which she upheld in showing her spring 1969 collection in Los Angeles in November. Miss Rose made news recently when it was announced that Mrs. Judy Agnew, wife of the vice president-elect, has chosen one of her designs for the inaugural Ball.

The gown selected by Mrs. Agnew, and ordered from one of her favorite stores in Pikesville, Md., is in shell pink satin back faille. The skirt is a gentle A-line, and the bodice crystal beaded.

wants freedom and a happy feeling to her evening clothes." Other favorite Rose fabrics are peau de sole, organza and soft matte, silk and chiffon-weight jerseys.

Being casual has become a habit for women in daytime clothes and Helen Rose interprets this attitude without forsaking the basics of excellent tailoring and dressmaking.

Earth, Sky Colors

For daytime, Miss Rose likes "the complete silhouette

... it should be three-piece." In colors, the designer sees spring's big color as white, and the softer earth and sky tones of grey, blue, brown and leaf greens. 'Paint-box' or hot colors are gone.

Somewhat of an oracle in fashion futures, Helen Rose was creating pants for evening wear at least 15 years ago and, she recalled for pants and the comfort and attractiveness of pants on most women as reasons for their current popularity. She fashion editors attending the California Fashion creators showing, "the stores opened the seams, sewed them into skirts, and then sold the garment." Not this year; this is the year of pants for evening.

Current Popularity of Zodiac Doesn't Please Astrologer

By ARLEEN ABRAHAM Associated Press Writer
NEW YORK (AP) — It would be logical to presume that the present boom in horoscopes, zodiac charts and all things astrological would make an astrologer very happy. Not Linda Goodman.

"The present popularity of astrology has made all the nuts crawl out of the woodwork," complains the attractive (she's a former Miss West Virginia contestant) astrologer and author of "Linda Goodman's Sun Signs." "That's the major problem with the field," she continues. "There's no governing board—no standards. Anyone can call himself an astrologer and start messing up people's lives."

In the time that Mrs. Goodman can spare from her astrological tasks—she does 8 to 10 zodiac charts a year, each one taking about two months to prepare and her writing endeavors—she's now at work on a book about reincarnation—she's been waging a campaign to make astrology a university-taught subject. She hopes this will help astrology achieve recognition as a scientific profession.

Exact Minute of Birth

Only by knowing a person's exact minute of birth, says Mrs. Goodman, can an astrologer hope for more than 80 per cent accuracy, the per cent of accuracy that can be expected by analyzing the broader category of sun signs. (Signs of the zodiac).

Mrs. Goodman admits that at first she fought against her own sun sign, just as her chart says she would. "I was drawn to astrology from the time I was 14, but I fought it. I didn't want to be a professional astrologer. You might say I was fated for it."

For years she followed astrology as a hobby, while professionally pursuing a TV and radio writing career. It was only after a series of personal crashes—among them the death of three children—that she entered the field on a full-time professional basis.

Mrs. Goodman, who is an Aries, "an impulsive one at that" believes that horoscopes and zodiac charts, can do a lot more than just provide a daily list of do's and don'ts for curious readers. "Sun signs and astrology can tell people what they and the ones close to them are really like. That's why I wrote my book, to show people what to expect and how to get what they want from their husbands, wives, children, bosses and employees. For example, say you want a raise. If your boss is a Leo, flattery will accomplish this. But if he's a Scorpio, flattery would only make him suspicious and you'd most likely lose your job."

Astrology, claims Mrs. Goodman, is very important when choosing a pet. "Of course dogs and cats have horoscopes," she says. "How do you think I picked my two pugs? They had to be a Sagittarius or a Virgo to get along with me, my Taurus husband, and my four children, a Scorpio, Capricorn, Sagittarius and Aquarius."

If you're a woman, you're interested in men. But do you know astrologically which of your qualities most attract the opposite sex and which ones tend to drive the men away? Astrologer Linda Goodman gives some capsule comments to assure a sunny, star-blessed romantic future.

Signs of Zodiac

ARIES (March 21 through April 20) You attract men because you believe in their miracles; you're never dull or boring. Be careful not to be too independent or bossy.

TAURUS (April 21 through May 20) Men admire your stability mixed with sensitivity. You're not adverse to helping out financially and you're a good cook too. Don't be so much of a homemaker, however that you neglect the girl-girl angles.

GEMINI (May 21 through June 21) Charm, wit and intelligence, what more can a man ask for? He can ask you to curb your restlessness and bitter sarcastic remarks and your roving eye can drive away even the most persistent suitor.

CANCER (June 22 through July 23) Your lunar laughter, utter femininity and sensitive gentle nature will draw the men. Then comes some excess melancholy and pessimism. If that doesn't deter him, your clinging vine behavior may.

LEO (July 24 through Aug. 23) Your strength, beauty and royal bearing makes a man feel he's escorting a queen. Beware of your jealousy and fiery temper.

VIRGO (Aug. 24 through Sept. 23) You do tend to project an air of purity and gentleness. Watch a tendency to be too neat and too punctual.

LIBRA (Sept. 24 through Oct. 23) Your smile can melt a man at 20 paces. If that's not enough you turn on your affectionate nature and natural softness. You may never make it to the altar, however; your basic indecisiveness may goof up any matrimonial opportunities.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24 through Nov. 22) You're passionate (physically) interested in everything, courageous and a bit mysterious. You're also vengeful and extremely jealous. And your ruthless drive for anything and everything may well frighten away a lesser man.

Sagittarius (Nov. 23 through Dec. 21) Men are drawn to your Polyanna attitude, your sense of comradeship and your wide-eyed refreshing frankness. If a man puts up with your untidy housekeeping, he may not put up with your embarrassing him in public, your wasteful extravagance and your refusing to take orders.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 through Jan. 20) You're steady, businesslike and practical and extremely devoted to one man. Watch a tendency to make love by a schedule and beware of causing in-law trouble by remaining too close to your family after marriage.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 through Feb. 19) Your mystical dreams, delightful unpredictability and elusive qualities weave strange spells around men. By the same token, your unconventional attitudes and a tendency to clutter a house with anyone who may drop in may scare some men off.

PISCES (Feb. 20 through March 20) You're all girl. You can compete equally for male attention with half your head hidden in a gunny sack. Once you've landed him, try to watch your changeable emotions.

Simple Cleanliness For Children

Remember the time-honored definition of a boy? "A small clean area surrounded by large smudges." It's true that most children go through a period of preferring the mud-pie splatter effect to a soap and water shine. But they do grow up sometime — and if you've patiently hammered into their little heads the importance of cleanliness, good habits carry over into adult life. This is a good reminder to impress on mothers — cleanliness habits started in childhood bring rich rewards in health later on.

The oldest of all health laws is the one most often abused — simple cleanliness. While the human skin has great powers for disinfecting itself, it has been proved that the removal of dirt and germs from the skin helps it carry out its own self-disinfecting powers.

Clyde Decides to Spend Night in Truck

BY ANN LANDERS

DEAR ANN LANDERS: My husband Clyde went on a 10-day moose hunt in a neighboring state. Our son and his family came to stay with me in his absence. Because we were a little short of space, I took my three-year-old grandson into my bed.

Clyde came home from the hunt about 2 a.m. When he found the boy in my bed he nearly took the roof off the house. I told him to pipe down — that I'd talk to him in the morning when he was sober and could act civilized. He said it was a fine thing when a man comes home from a hunting trip and finds a fella in his wife's bed. A fella? Can you imagine anything so crazy, Ann? Our three-year-old grandson he calls a fella!

Clyde spent the night in the pickup truck. He showed up for breakfast the next morning but didn't speak to anybody. It's 9 p.m. now and it looks as if he is fixing to spend another night in the truck. Our company leaves tomorrow, but if I know Clyde he'll stay mad for two weeks. Please tell me what to do. I'll apologize if you say so. — I Hate Fights.

Dear I: Apologize for what? You did nothing wrong. Why do you feel

Why do the teachers always display the best drawings and cutouts on the bulletin boards in their classrooms? Don't they realize the importance of giving encouragement to the less gifted — the little boy or girl who doesn't do quite so well?

It is understandable that some youngsters are blessed with artistic talent and others are not. It stands to reason that the talented child will get his work displayed regularly. I wonder if the teacher ever gives a thought to the youngster whose work never gets displayed?

Today my own little girl came home from school with the saddest look I've ever seen. She told me the picture she drew this morning was her very best one but the teacher didn't hang it up. She said with tears in her eyes, "I thought sure Miss Green would pick mine this time."

I hope you will print this letter, Ann Landers. Nobody listens to me but a lot of people listen to you. — A Little Blue Today

Dear Blue: Thousands of teachers all over the world read your letter. It was a very good one. Thanks for writing it.

Ann Landers will be glad to help you with your problems. Send them to her in care of this newspaper, enclosing a self-addressed, stamped envelope.

U. S. Aircraft Loss Nearly $5 Billion in Vietnam Since '61

4,768 Planes, Copters Taken
By Enemy Fire, Other Causes

SAIGON (AP) — The Vietnam war's toll on U.S. aircraft is approaching the $5 billion mark. Figures issued by the U.S. Command Saturday showed the United States has lost 4,768 aircraft—2,493 planes and 2,275 helicopters—from enemy fire and all other causes since Jan. 1, 1961.

The best estimate available here places the loss at about $4.3 billion in conventional aircraft—meaning bombers, fighters, cargo carriers and observation planes—and at least $500 million in helicopters, a total of $4.8 billion.

Forest Sweep

Although the loss of planes has tapered off sharply since the bombing of North Vietnam halted Nov. 1, the war is still taking a steady toll of helicopters.

Some are involved now in sweeps in the U Minh Forest, a Viet Cong sanctuary on the gulf of Siam that somewhat resembles Florida's Everglades.

It was in this forest that a helicopter last week rescued Maj. James Rowe of McAllen, Tex., a U.S. Special Forces officer who had just broken free after five years of Viet Cong captivity.

A South Vietnamese battalion working through the forest's northern fringes unearthed an enemy arms cache Saturday that included 39 heavy weapons—mortars, bazookas and machine-guns. It was the third significant find in three days.

The allies mounted more than 100 operations of battalion size or larger across the country in the over-all efforts to wreck any Viet Cong plans for a new offensive against Saigon and crush enemy units wherever they might be found.

Contacts Slight

Spokesmen said contacts were slight.

South Vietnamese soldiers reported one of the contacts was the successful ambush of a Viet Cong band caught moving by sampans on a stream about 30 miles south of Saigon. They said they killed 25 and seized 59 weapons—carbines and submachine guns—abandoned by the fleeing survivors.

The U.S. Navy said enemy rocket crews fired on three freighters, including the American-owned, 7,882-ton Overseas Rose, in the Long Tau shipping channel south of Saigon Friday. But none was hit.

American air losses in Vietnam, while comprising only about one-sixth of the World War II total of 27,137 far less expensive aircraft, already considerably exceed the Korean War figure of 3,001.

U.S. officials consider the Vietnam toll is not unreasonable for the type of combat. They cite such things as the degree of exposure of the vulnerable helicopters to enemy fire and the fact fighter-bombers over North Vietnam were subjected to the most sophisticated system of air defenses ever employed against attacking planes.

Monte Carlo Idea

Gamble in Comfort of Home

PARIS (AP) — The Monte Carlo Casino is thinking about Monaco's television station, world export of Monaco's big Tele-Monte Carlo, is planned national resource, the roulette table, via a gamble-at-home television setup.

You bet during the week with hardt of Paris, a professional cards on sale at tobacco shops and then sit back Saturday night and watch the wheel spin. The idea has the backing "in gar shops and buy one of two principle" of Wilfred Groote, the director general of the Societe des Bains de Mer, the company that runs nearly everything, including the casino, in the principality on the Riviera.

Necessary Authorization "We would go along," he said Saturday by telephone in Monte Carlo, "but it's up to the promoters of the scheme to get all the necessary governmental authorization."

This seemed to exclude the United States, but the promoters talked about a Mexican hookup that would spill into California. An operation through Monaco's television station, has shown concern about investment in the principality, in particular the amount of American money backing new hotel ventures.

The promoter is Pierre Beck-Groote, who introduced American block jack and twenty-one at the casino, is not a favorite of the French. The tele-roulette proposal is not expected to get an enthusiastic greeting from the government of President Charles de Gaulle.

'Dip' Time Trimmed; It's Just Too Cold

AUBURN, N.Y. (AP) — Carl Dickman trimmed his time in the water to a minute Wednesday in his annual New Year's Day dip in Owasco Lake.

He gave as reasons the five degree temperature, a 33-mile-an-hour wind and a water temperature of 33 degrees.

Dickman, 61, has been following the ritual for 30 years.

Letters Oppose Conservation Stand of Hickel

Writers Want Close
Questioning of Nixon
Interior Appointee

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate Interior Committee has received some 200 letters on President-elect Nixon's designation of Alaska Gov. Walter Hickel as his secretary of the interior—all reportedly critical or demanding close questioning of the nominee.

"When you never get much mail, anything seems like a lot," staff director Jerry T. Verker said Saturday, adding that "It indicates there is widespread interest in the nomination."

Senators Critical

At least two Democratic members of the committee, Sens. Gaylord Nelson of Wisconsin and George S. McGovern of South Dakota, have criticized recent statements by Hickel including his criticism of "conservation for conservation's sake."

The Alaska governor appears to be the only one of Nixon's 12 Cabinet appointees facing any difficulty in winning Senate confirmation.

Neither Sen. Henry M. Jackson, D-Wash., the committee chairman, nor Sen. Gordon Allott of Colorado, ranking GOP member, has taken a stand on the nomination. But Republican Leader Everett M. Dirksen of Illinois has praised it as "one of the best Cabinet appointments Nixon has made."

Questioning Jan. 15

The Interior Committee, meanwhile, announced that Hickel will be questioned at an open hearing Wednesday Jan. 15—five days before Nixon's inauguration.

While the governor is the only scheduled witness so far, aides indicated conservation groups may want to testify after they see what the nominee has to say for himself.

In announcing the hearings, Jackson said "it is my hope that our committee hearings will serve as a forum for a clear-cut expression of the views and philosophy of the secretary-designate."

Today is Sunday, Jan. 5, the fifth day of 1969. There are 360 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history: On this date in 1896, the German physicist, Wilhelm Roentgen, announced the discovery of the X-ray.

On this date: In 1477, the Swiss defeated and killed Charles the Bold of Burgundy at the Battle of Nancy.

In 1608, the Virginia colonist, Capt. John Smith, was captured by the Indians.

In 1781, a British naval expedition under command of the American traitor, Benedict Arnold, burned and plundered Richmond, Va.

In 1893, the Great Northern Railroad was completed with the driving of the last spike at the east-west junction point of the Cascade Mountains.

In 1925, Mrs. Nellie Taylor Ross was sworn in as governor of Wyoming, becoming the first woman to hold a governorship.

In 1933, former President Calvin Coolidge died at this home in Northampton, Mass.

Cairo's semi-official Al Ahram newspaper recently reported the existence of an Egyptian guerrilla force operating in the Israeli-occupied Sinai.

This fifth group has claimed several successful operations ranging from destruction of ammunition dumps left behind by the retreating Egyptian army to the rescue of Arab saboteurs from inside Israeli camps on the east bank of the Suez Canal.

Strength of this group, the so-called Commando Organization for the Liberation of Sinai is unknown.

Manitowoc Gets 2nd Namesake

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — The USS Manitowoc, the second war craft to be named after the Wisconsin city, was launched Saturday at the Philadelphia Naval Ship Yard.

The $24.45 million troop and tank landing ship (LST) is 522 feet long, about a third larger than the World War II variety. It has six diesel engines.

Sen. Gaylord Nelson, D-Wis., speaking at the ceremonies, said the name of the vessel was assigned to the vessel because the Lake Michigan port manufactured 28 submarines, 37 landing craft, 144 mine sweepers and 17 other vessels during the war.

A Navy craft built in 1943 in Superior, Wis., also was named the Manitowoc, and was later sold to France.

Racine Woman's 'Proud Land' Boasts Sweet Smell of Success

BY MARY WITT
Post-Crescent Staff Writer

A rose is a rose is a rose? Not when it's a prize-winning rose like the one grown by Mrs. Robert Hazen of Racine, who admits that roses, her favorite flowers, have all but taken over her garden. Each plant is carefully tended, but none of the fragrant blooms receive more attention than the beautiful red ones which were delivered to Mrs. Hazen two years ago when she agreed to join a panel of 10,000 gardeners selected by Jackson & Perkins Co. to evaluate and name test plants.

Of the four varieties distributed to panelists, a clear red hybrid tea, an offspring of the famous Chrysler Imperial, was received by Mrs. Hazen. The 3½-to-4-foot high plant bears double blooms reaching 4½ to 5½ inches in diameter and featuring as many as 60 velour-like petals surrounded by dark green foliage.

As Mrs. Hazen nurtured the plant and watched it grow, she noted that the blooms of the test plant lacked the slight droop of most roses.

Inspiration for Name

"They stood so straight that they seemed proud to me," explained Mrs. Hazen as she recollected how she settled upon the name, "Proud Land," for the brand new rose.

Little did she know when she submitted her evaluation and suggested name, that "Proud Land" would be selected the 1969 Rose of the Year. But after sitting four times through the thousands of results from the participants scattered across the nation, Jackson & Perkins chose to award the honor to Mrs. Hazen.

How was Mrs. Hazen chosen to be a member of the panel?

The answer is still a mystery to the Racine woman, who confines her gardening strictly to her own yard and has yet to join a garden club. But whatever the reason, the fact remains that Mrs. Hazen now numbers among seven other home gardeners who have named the Jackson & Perkins annual Rose of the Year during the past decade.

Mrs. Hazen's Competition

The Newark, N.Y., based company, the largest rose dealer in the world, reports that the development of a new rose, the selection of a name and the introduction of the final result to the public is a process that may take as long as 10 years and $50,000 in research and promotional costs.

The final choices are submitted to one of five branches of the American Rose Society with offices in the United States, France, Australia, Italy, England and Holland. Each serves as a clearing house where the proposals are checked to eliminate duplication of names chosen after 1913, when the registration of roses first began.

In 1968, as in the past, name suggestions fell into two or three different categories, with the majority denoting color and the second largest group descriptive of fragrance. But for the first time, nearly a third of the entries submitted for the red hybrid tea bore a patriotic flavor with such names as "Old Glory," "Uncle Sam," "America's Pride," "Pioneer," and "Liberty Bell," all of which were discarded in favor of Mrs. Hazen's "Proud Land."

Exotic Names Missing

Missing from 1968's proposed names was the preponderance of exotic names based on popular vacation spots, such as Hawaii and Spain. But ever present were the multitude of names recalling famous persons with orchestra leader, Guy Lombardo and his Royal Canadians lending their names to the "Royal Canadian Rose," another of the four new roses to be introduced by Jackson & Perkins this year.

Developed from unnamed seedlings, the "Royal Canadian Rose" is a deep red hybrid tea with double blooms 4 to 5 inches in diameter and 30 to 40 petals. The plant is 2½ to 3½ feet tall.

A third new rose bears the name of "Vin Rose," an appropriate title for the translucent pink hybrid tea. Tinged with bright coral shading and consisting of 30 to 35 overlapping petals, the bloom is nestled amidst pale green, leathery foliage.

All America Rose

Rounding out Jackson & Perkins new roses for 1969 is "The Gene Boerner Rose," winner of the 1969 All America Rose Selection award.

Named in honor of its creator, the late Eugene S. Boerner, longtime director of plant research for Jackson & Perkins and a pioneer in rose hybridization, the bright pink floribunda is of Garnette and Spartan ancestry with petite blooms and light green foliage.

And there are more roses yet to come. Already, test plants for 1970 and 1971 are being closely watched in gardens around the nation, including Racine, where Mrs. Hazen's green thumb and fertile imagination are making sure that a rose is more than just a rose.

"Proud Land" Will be joined by three other new roses to be introduced this spring. Gracing gardens around the world will be the "Royal Canadian Rose," a fragrant, deep red hybrid tea; "The Gene Boerner Rose," a bright pink floribunda, and "Vin Rose," a translucent pink hybrid tea.

Boilermakers Rally for 86-80 Win in Big 10 Opener; Sherrod Hits 20

MADISON (AP) — Purdue's flashy Rick Mount, the Big Ten defending scoring champion, scored 33 points in leading the Boilermakers to an 86-80 basketball triumph over Wisconsin Saturday in the Big 10 conference opener for both teams.

The hot-handed Mount took charge in the closing minutes by scoring seven points as the Boilermakers rallied to tie the game and then surged in front to stay.

Mount knotted the score at 73-73 with a field goal with three minutes to go, followed with a layup seconds later and calmly sank two free throws.

Teammate Bill Keller followed with two free throws and gave the visitors the biggest margin either side had during the hard-fought contest.

Suffers Fifth Loss

Wisconsin, which suffered its fifth loss in 10 starts, held a 22-16 lead in the first half but trailed 42-39 at intermission.

The victory was the Boilermakers' eighth against three defeats.

Mount, who paced Big Ten scorers with a 29-point average as a sophomore last year, hit 11 of 25 field goal attempts. A cold third period for the talented guard enabled Wisconsin to remain within striking distance until the final minutes.

Sophomore Clarence Sherrod topped the Badger scoring with 20 points. The team's scoring leader, James Johnson, tallied 18.

Tips Iowa, 99-92 Michigan '5' Opens Big 10 Season With Overtime Victory

ANN ARBOR, Mich. (AP)—Michigan completely dominated an overtime period to open the Big Ten Basketball season with a 99-92 victory over Iowa Saturday.

Rudy Tomjanovich paced the Wolverines, scoring eight of their 20 overtime points.

The Wolverines led 43-39 at halftime and hung on to the lead through the first 11 minutes of the second half, but sloppy ball handling cost them the edge and with 1:37 left in the half the Hawkeyes took a 79-75 advantage.

Tomjanovich came through with a tip-in with 20 seconds remaining and Dennis Stewart scored the tying basket on a jump shot with just eight seconds showing on the clock, putting the game into overtime.

The victory pushed Michigan's record to 7-3 on the season. The Hawkeyes are now 6-4.

Michigan kept Iowa in foul trouble throughout the game. The Hawkeyes lost Dick Jensen and Ben McGilmer when they fouled out late in the second half, then lost Glenn Vidnovic and John Johnson in overtime.

Enyart Paces Muddy 13-7 Win Simpson Runs 88 Yards, but South Loses in Hula Bowl

HONOLULU (AP)—The North All-Stars, powered over a muddy field by fullback Bill Enyart of Oregon State, squeezed out two touchdowns to offset an 88-yard kickoff return by the South's O. J. Simpson of Southern California and win the Hula Bowl football game 13-7 Saturday.

Neither team was able to navigate on a field turned into a quagmire by two days of a tropical downpour.

Enyart scored both of the North team's touchdowns on short plunges, one following a fumble and the other after a pass interception.

Simpson's sizzling kickoff return was practically the only offensive gesture by the South.

Surfboard Riders

The game started in a steady drizzle, following rains that had already dumped twice the January average of water on Honolulu Stadium. Tackled ball carriers resembled Waikiki surfboard riders as they skidded to a stop.

The North relied on rollouts by quarterback Coley O'Brien of Notre Dame and Enyart's plunges.

The Oregon State fullback carried 24 times for 86 yards.

Simpson packed the ball 21 times for 92 yards and his kickoff return following the North's second touchdown set a Hula Bowl record. The old mark was 78 yards by Billy Cannon of Louisiana State in 1960.

Enyart edged Simpson by one vote in balloting for outstanding back.

Outstanding lineman of the game was Tim Buchanan of the home University of Hawaii team. Ed White of California, also of the South, was runnerup in the line voting.

Chip Litten, Minnesota end, was injured in the first quarter and was taken to the hospital for X-rays of his neck.

Gets First Break

The North got its first break early in the game, when quarterback Ronny Johnson of Oklahoma State fumbled the soaking football on the first play of the second series of downs. Art Thoms of Syracuse recovered on the South 20.

O'Brien kept to the six, Enyart banged to the three and then took it over. The conversion try was blocked by McKinley Reynolds of Hawaii.

In the second quarter the North got to the South 29 before they were stalled.

Simpson fumbled the ball back to the North at the 33, George Dames of Oregon recovering.

O'Brien squirmed to the 11 when he was trapped attempting to pass, and Enyart bulled to the eight, but then the North fumbled and Bill Bradley of Texas recovered.

Dames recovered another fumble for the North later in the half. Warner Wong of Oregon also picked off two fumbles for the North.

The third quarter was spent slithering around midfield until Ken Crite of Wisconsin intercepted a pass thrown by Southern California's Steve Sogge and took it to the South 30.

A fumble advanced it to the 24 and then Enyart took it to the nine on three carries.

On the first play of the fourth quarter, O'Brien went to the one on a keeper and Enyart banged it over with just 10 seconds of the quarter gone. Ed Podolak of Iowa converted.

The kickoff went to Simpson who caught it on his 12, dropped it, fished around in a mud puddle and eventually located the ball, burst through a crowd at the 20, cut to the sidelines at the 30, straight-armed a defender and outraced everybody for the touchdown.

Buckeyes Hold Back Indiana to Cop Win, 90-82

BLOOMINGTON, Ind. (AP) — Ohio State snuffed out an Indiana rally after blowing a 20-point lead Saturday night and whipped the Hoosiers 90-82 in the Big Ten basketball opener.

But the defending co-champs stopped the drive as Denny Meadors canned a lay-up and Jim Clemons hit from the corner to make it 73-88.

The Hoosiers got close again with 3:42 to go as Branaugh scored a three-point play which left Indiana trailing 80-78. But Meadors tallied on two straight reverse lay-ups which put the Buckeyes out of danger.

Dave Sorenson of OSU was high scorer of the game with 24 and Meadors was next at 16. The Hoosiers, minus 6-foot-9 Bill DeHeer who is sidelined with an ankle injury, were led by Cooke with 21. Johnson and Branaugh each chipped in 18.

NCAA Plans Program 'To Cool Youth Problems'

LOS ANGELES (AP)—A summer sports program to cool youth problems with the heat of competition was announced Saturday by the National Collegiate Athletic Association.

In conjunction with the federal government, the NCAA plans a nationwide endeavor to make university and college gymnasiums, athletic fields and swimming pools available to youngsters, especially those from poverty areas.

NCAA President Marcus Plant of Michigan explained the program at a news conference preceding Monday's official opening of the group's annual meeting.

"We think that this will put into operation in the 25 largest cities a program which will be constructive in many ways and help solve the problems of the inner city," said Plant.

Costs, estimated at from $4 million to $6 million, will be paid by the government. The NCAA will furnish facilities and personnel. The programs will last at least four weeks and hopefully six during the summer.

Plant said 77 institutions in the 25 communities have been invited to a meeting Tuesday to review the plans. None has committed itself but all replied favorably to the initial questionnaire, he said.

Cities involved are New York, Los Angeles, Chicago, Philadelphia, Detroit, Boston, San Francisco, Oakland, Washington, D.C., Pittsburgh, St. Louis, Cleveland, Baltimore, Newark, Houston, Minneapolis-St. Paul, Cincinnati, Buffalo, Paterson, Clifton-Passaic, N.J., Dallas, Milwaukee, Atlanta, Kansas City, Seattle, San Diego and Anaheim.

Boys and girls 12 to 13 will be eligible for the program. The plan also will provide a combination of employment and on-the-job training in sports instruction and administration for older students.

Kush Named to Head Coaching Position at Pitt

Arizona State Coach Takes Over Panthers After 1-9 Season

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Frank Kush, coach at Arizona State University for the past 11 years, was named head coach of the University of Pittsburgh Saturday.

Kush, a former All-American lineman at Michigan State, succeeds Dave Hart, who resigned last month after the Panther's 1-9 season. Kush was the winningest coach in Arizona State football history.

His appointment was announced by Pitt Athletic Director Casimir Myslinski.

"I went out looking for a winner and I found him," said Myslinski. "He's a hard worker, a scrapper."

Kush is a native of Winber, near Johnstown, Pa.

"He is compatible with the area," Myslinski said. "He has recruited in the tri-state area and knows many of the local football coaches. That will give us a terrific advantage. He also knows New Jersey, an important source for good material."

He'll arrive in Pittsburgh in about 10 days and begin recruiting immediately.

"My biggest job at Pitt will be to change the attitude of the fans from losing to winning," said Kush.

Northwestern Wins Opener Wildcats Rip Spartans, 85-71

EAST LANSING, Mich. (AP) — Dan Davis and Terry Gamber led Northwestern on a 17-point spree in the closing six minutes of the first half Saturday night as the Wildcats rolled to an 85-71 win over Michigan State in the Big Ten opener for both teams.

It was Northwestern's ninth straight win.

The Spartans led 25-23 with 5:49 left in the half when Gamber and Davis went to town. Gamber and Davis each had six points in the spurt that carried the Wildcats to a 40-28 halftime edge.

Four of Gamber's points during the Northwestern rally came from the free throw line. The little guard was 13-for-13 from the charity stripe for the night.

Gamber's backcourt partner, Dale Kelley, led Northwestern scorers with 19 points as Terry Lafaye paced Michigan State with 20.

Northwestern is now 9-1 for the season with only an opening loss at Stanford marring its record. Michigan State is 4-5, having lost in its last five outings.

To Rehire or Not to Rehire Reeves, Allen Meet; No Decision Given

LOS ANGELES (AP) — President Dan Reeves of pro football's Rams met for 2½ hours at his home Saturday with the man he fired as head coach, George Allen.

Afterward, the Rams announced "a decision will be forthcoming in a few days on whether Allen will be re-hired."

A number of the club's top players said they'd quit if Allen's Dec. 26 dismissal, which Reeves blamed on a personality conflict, stuck.

Later, Allen's wife said he'd been offered the job back, but wants a new contract. He's had offers from other clubs, too, she said.

Allen himself has been mum since a news conference at which he said he'd like to stay with the club.

The Rams declined to elaborate on the one-sentence announcement about the meeting.

Roncalli Cage Team Wins Over Pennings

MANITOWOC — The Manitowoc Roncalli basketball team toppled De Pere Abbot Pennings, 63-60, Saturday night.

The loss dropped the Squires (5-2) into a 3-way tie for second place in the Fox Valley Catholic Conference, with Roncalli and Premontre. First-place Appleton Xavier (7-0) now leads by two games.

Roncalli opened a 30-22 halftime lead and increased it to 13 points (47-34) after three periods. Pennings surged to a 26-point fourth quarter, with the help of a full court press, but was unable to come closer than three points of a tie. The Jets' Tom Dodge came up with a pair of 3-point plays late in the game to preserve his team's margin.

The Jets were paced by Dufek's 18 points. Dodge added 15, and Mike Dowd had 12. Pennings was led by John Albers' 17 points, and Steve Kolb had 13.

Villanova Tops Bonnies in Last Minute, 68-67

OLEAN, N.Y. (AP) — Frank Gillen turned a missed free throw into a desperation 25-foot jump shot at the buzzer to give ninth-ranked Villanova a 68-67 basketball victory over 20th-ranked St. Bonaventure Saturday afternoon.

The first half was a see-saw battle that saw the Villanova Wildcats take a 31-30 edge at intermission on a buzzer jump shot by Gillen from 15 feet.

The Wildcats' Howard Porter led the scoring with 27 points.

New Rules May Set Records in Pole Vaulting

Hope That by '72 Baseball Will be An Olympic Event

LOS ANGELES (AP)—Olympic Games of the future could see higher pole vaults and the addition of baseball.

Track coaches attending the annual National Collegiate Athletic Association meeting here Saturday voiced approval of the International Track and Field Federation's new rule that will allow the pole to fall under the bar after a jump.

Meanwhile, baseball coaches continued efforts to have the sport added as an Olympic event and set 1976 as the target date, since the United States may host the Games that year.

The NCAA track and field rules committee is expected to endorse the IFFF's new vault rule, making it applicable to track meets in this country. Many U.S. coaches want it to become effective March 1, two months sooner than the rule goes into effect internationally, so it will be in effect throughout the outdoor collegiate season.

Bill McClure of Abilene Christian College, chairman of the rules committee, said he will poll the committee by telephone.

"I think it will mean higher vaults," the chairman said. "In the past, several records were nullified when the pole came forward."

Presumably, vaulters now will not have to worry about momentum of the pole as they leap, so this season could see the first 18-foot mark. Bob Seagrén, Olympic gold medal winner from the University of Southern California, holds the current world mark at 17 feet 9 inches, set during the Olympic Trials at South Lake Tahoe, Calif.

W. P. "Dutch" Fehring of Stanford, re-elected to his fourth term as president of the Baseball Federation of the United States, told of the international hopes for his sport.

"First, we're hoping this summer, perhaps in Honolulu, to host the closest to a world amateur baseball tournament ever attempted," he said.

He envisions the United States, Philippines, Korea, Japan, Canada, Mexico, Cuba, Puerto Rico and perhaps some European nations competing.

"We firmly believe the world is ready for baseball to be included in the Olympics as a regular sport," Fehring continued. "The rule is that 25 nations must play the sport and we know 35 are now playing it."

"We don't think baseball can be included in 1972 at Munich because it isn't a big sport in Germany, but we hope that in 1976 the Olympics will be in the United States or some other nation where baseball is entrenched. So that's our target date."

Botts, McLendon Share Lead in Golf Tourney

BUENA PARK, Calif. (AP) — Ray Botts birdied four of the first five holes and his 65 tied him with Mac McLendon for the first round lead Saturday in the Southern California Open Golf Tournament.

McLendon, former Louisiana State University star, shot 65 on Friday.

Both men shot 7-under-par rounds over the 6,905-yard Los Coyotes Country Club course. The field was cut to 80 for today's final round.

Sacramento's Bob Lunn, who blistered the back nine Saturday for a 31 and a 66 was one stroke behind. Defending champion Billy Casper was four strokes off the pace with a 69, three under par on the 36-36—72 par test.

National Open champion Lee Trevino, had a 71.

Tar Heels Tip Duke, 94-70

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP)—Charlie Scott scored a season high 34 points Saturday to lead fourth-ranked North Carolina to an easy 94-70 victory over Duke in an Atlantic Coast Conference game.

The Tar Heels jumped to a quick 8-0 lead in the regionally televised game and Duke never recovered. The biggest lead for the once-beaten Tar Heels was 27, coming with 14:20 left.

Scott's 34 points tied his career high. The Olympic performer had 34 last year against N.C. State.

Duke scoring was led by Rich Katherman and Fred Lind, each with 17 points.

Terrors Beat Ghosts

BY RON WITT Post-Crescent Staff Writer

Appleton West's Terrors bolted to a 15-2 lead in the first six minutes of play and then held off Kaukauna rallies in the second and third periods for a 64-51 non-conference victory over the Ghosts in Selms gym Saturday night.

The West triumph was its fourth in nine games for the season and came on the heels of a heart-breaking, 52-50 loss at Oshkosh the night before. Kaukauna, meanwhile, was dropping its fifth straight game and 10th of the season in 11 games.

Sophomore center Mike Moriarty was the top gunner for the winners with eight baskets and 16 points. Teammates Mark Schroeder and Mark Catlin collected 13 and 12, respectively.

Guard Sean Rohan, who did not start, tossed in 13 points the Ghosts' scoring honors. Al Borchardt chipped in with 12, and Jack Kempen hit 11. Forward Dave La Borda, consistently Kaukauna's top point-maker during the season, had an off night with eight points.

The home forces, who led the entire contest, connected on six of their first nine shots in the opening canto en route to the 13-point advantage. But just as it appeared Kaukauna might roll over and play dead, the Ghosts came hustling back to make a game out of it.

By the close of the first period, Kaukauna had shaved the deficit to a respectable 17-9. Rohan led a brief charge in the early moments of the second quarter, and his 3-point play with 5:15 to go cut the margin to four points at 20-16.

West then went on its own little streak, outscoring the visitors, 14-8. The spurt was keyed by a basket and two free throws from Brad McIntyre and four gift tosses by Rick Reitzner. However, three straight baskets by Kempen, Rohan and Leon Franzke in the last 55 seconds left the Terrors with a precarious 34-30 halftime edge.

Close Within Two Kaukauna came the closest at any point in the game in the first minute of the third quarter.

Einstein Rallies For 58-57 Win

Einstein rallied from a 27-23 halftime deficit to defeat Wilson, 58-57, Friday night in a Fox Valley Freshman League battle.

The Einstein quint outscored Wilson 16-7 in the third quarter to grab a five point lead. But Wilson took the final frame, 23-19, although they didn't quite have enough time to win.

Larry Stranghoner led the winners, now 4-1, with 14 points. Ron Bytof paced the losers with 19.

King on Win: Purdue in Thick of Big Ten Title Race

MADISON, Wis. (AP)—Coach George King's Purdue Boilermakers thrust themselves into the thick of the Big Ten basketball title chase Saturday with their 86-80 victory over Wisconsin.

That, in any case, is the way King sized up the triumph.

"Any time you win on the road in the Big Ten, it's an upset," King declared.

He predicted that a 9-5 record would enable a team to share first place honors in the conference.

King said "all of the teams" in the league are stronger this year, including Minnesota's Gophers who were picked by some to wind up in the cellar.

King said his do everything performer, flashy Rick Mount, made the key play which broke open the contest in the final minutes of play.

Mount, who tied the game at 73-73 on a field goal with less than three minutes remaining, followed with a driving layup seconds later and was fouled by ter, when Kempen and Rohan converted single free throws to make it 34-32. But then Schroeder retaliated with a drive-in and short jumper, and Moriarty swished a turn-around to push the count up to 40-32.

Still, Kaukauna wouldn't quit and hailed within four points again at 43-49, but reserve Scott Hanson countered with a nifty reverse layup and Schroeder hit from the foul line before the end of the quarter to make it 46-39.

The Ghosts' last gasp came when LaBorda notched a free toss at the start of the last frame. West gradually pulled away after that juncture behind Catlin and Hanson, and enjoyed its widest edge of the night at 64-49 with 36 seconds remaining.

The Terrors were actually outshot in terms of percentage from the floor. West had a 45.5 mark on 27 of 62 attempts, while Kaukauna made 21 of 46 for 45.6 per cent.

KAUKAUNA (9-21-9-12—51) Franzke 3-9-3; Borchardt 5-2-1; Andrews 0-1-2; Kempen 5-1-2; LaBorda 5-2-4; Rohan 5-3-1; Myers 1-0-0; Grob 1-0-0. Totals 27-14-4. FTM—7.

APPLETON WEST (17-17-10-18—64) Moriarty 1-5-2; Moriarty 3-0-1; Catlin 6-0-2; Schroeder 5-3-3; McIntyre 3-2-3; Hanson 3-0-1; Arnoldussen 1-0-0; Simon 0-0-0. Totals 27-10-12. FTM—7.

Gibraltar Quint Tops Mustangs

LITTLE CHUTE — The Little Chute Mustangs connected on only 31 per cent of their floor shots as they lost to Gibraltar, 62-50, here Saturday night.

The Vikings jumped off to an 18-12 lead at the end of the initial stanza, and came off the court at half-time with a 36-30 advantage. They increased the margin by five in the third period and one in the fourth.

Six-foot forward Mike Fitzpatrick, of Little Chute, took scoring honors with 11 field goals and two charity shots for a total of 24 points. Guard Bob Hackel was second for the Mustangs with 10.

Dave Voskuil paced the Vikings from his guard position as he turned in a total of 19 points. Forward Mark Lautenbach added 17 for Gibraltar.

Led by Bill Fitzpatrick's 11 snags, the Mustangs out-rebounded their opponents, 20-12. But any advantage in the rebound department was wiped out by Little Chute's low shooting percentage and numerous turnovers.

Little Chute capitalized on eight of 20 shots from the foul line, for 40 per cent. Gibraltar made four of nine, good for 44 per cent.

LITTLE CHUTE — (12 18 12 8—50)—Mollen 2 0 3; Balgie 3 1 0; Hackel 4 2 0; Bill Fitzpatrick 1 3 2; Mike Fitzpatrick 11 2 2. Totals—21 8 7.

How About a 24-Hour Jog?

100 Miles Covered By Los Angeles Man In Endurance Test

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Jogging becomes more refined with the latest development a 24-hour event at the Los Angeles Athletic Club.

At least they tried to go 24 hours. The best male showing was made by Bud Murphy, a 41-year-old advertising executive who covered 100 miles over the indoor track in 21 hours and 36 minutes.

Steve Shomber, assistant athletic director at the club, reported this unofficially to be a world record. He said the same could be true for the 50 miles jogged in 23½ hours by Marti Cole, a gal freelance photographer.

Winnie McCoy, a secretary, kept going for the 24 hours and covered 29.2 miles.

Each runner took breaks for nutrition.

Second best among the men during the marathon was Lu Dosti, a 40-year-old engineer who ran 91.3 miles in 22 hours.

Twenty-four men and women attempted the full 24-hour test, with many others joining them for stints of from five to seven hours.

Rising Cost of Athletics to be Studied in Full

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Worried over rising costs of intercollegiate football which override increased attendance, the National Collegiate Athletic Association today studies countermeasures which could include a return to the one-plateon game.

Chairman John Waldorf and Secretary David Nelson of the Football Rules Committee were invited to meet with the NCAA Council to discuss the situation.

On Monday, when the 63rd annual convention of the NCAA officially opens, a round table discussion takes a look at "the rising costs of intercollegiate athletics."

Any return to one-plateon remains the prerogative of the Rules Committee which meets later this month in Palm Springs, but the convention also has power.

It could virtually issue a mandate through limiting the size of squads or the number of grants-in-aid.

Many football coaches have violently opposed a change in the present two-plateon system with different teams for offense and defense and some are sure to be heard.

Sorensen Finds Familiar Casts in TV Bowl Games

BY GEORGE MANCOSKY
Post-Crescent Staff Writer

MENASHA — When Dick Sorensen tuned in his television set to one of the numerous football bowl games that were telecast in recent weeks, he recognized many names and numbers.

Sorensen, the son of Mrs. Bernard Pawlowski, 233 Sunset Lane, and a former 3-sport star at Menasha High School, was the starting left linebacker on the University of Miami football team and six of the teams that were on the Hurricanes' schedule last fall appeared in bowl games during this holiday season.

They included Rose Bowl loser Southern California, Orange Bowl winner Penn State, Sun Bowl victor Auburn, Peach Bowl winner Louisiana State, Gator Bowl loser Alabama and Liberty Bowl loser Virginia Tech.

Miami, which finished with a 5-5 record, defeated LSU, 30-0, and Virginia Tech, 13-8, and lost to Southern Cal, 28-3, Auburn, 31-6, Penn State, 22-7, and Alabama, 14-6.

The 6-3, 205-pound junior vividly recalls the USC game and its fabulous O. J. Simpson for he frequently came in contact with the Heisman Trophy winner on that Oct. 5 night in Los Angeles.

Unique All-American
"He is a unique All-American, not cocky at all," Sorensen says of Simpson. "Every time I'd hit him, he says nice hit or good hit buddy, as I hit him as hard as I could," the ex-Bluejay star said he tackled O. J. five times and assisted on a couple of others.

Sorensen recalls that he made his only interception against the Trojans. "I picked off one of Steve Sogge's passes but didn't go very far with my 14 seconds flat speed. Simpson caught me from behind without much trouble."

Miami played a zone defense most of the time and the linebackers weren't required to cover the speedy halfbacks, flankers and ends too often.

Penn State Best
Of all the powerhouses that the Hurricanes faced, Sorensen called Penn State the toughest. He noted that the Nittany Lions were the best balanced and best blocking team. "They had fine backs in Bob Campbell and Charlie Pittman and tight end Ted Kwalick is the best tight end I've played against," the Menasha athlete stated.

Miami blitzed Louisiana State in a game in which it did everything right. It was played in the Orange Bowl, which also will be the site of next year's battle against the Bayou Bengals.

As a sophomore, the business administration major was a alternate linebacker on the Miami team that upset LSU at Baton Rouge, which was an experience he'll never forget.

It seems that the Louisiana State mascot is a live tiger, which is paraded around the stadium before the game. The cheerleaders poke at it, pound on its cage and it makes such a noise that the opponents would just as soon leave by the nearest exit.

Makes 13 Tackles
The 2-year veteran, who went to Miami as a defensive half-back but who became a linebacker when he was redshirted the next year, had probably his best game in the finale against Florida. He turned in 13 unassisted tackles and helped on three.

In all, he wound up with 52 tackles and 34 assists, putting him far ahead of all of the other linebackers on the squad. He also recovered four fumbles, which is the second best one season mark in Miami history.

Football is a year-round proposition at Miami. The Hurricane gridders will be confronted by final exams when they return from the holiday vacation but will work on weights and run with spring football starting early in February.

Miami plays its home games on Friday nights in the Orange Bowl, get Saturday off and usually return to practice on Sunday. It averages about 55,000 spectators for home games and had a high of 79,000 a year ago when Notre Dame was the attraction.

Loses Hendricks
The Coral Gables, Fla. university loses its All-American defensive end Ted Hendricks (whom Sorensen believes will be a first round draft choice in the upcoming draft) but prospects for next year are optimistic.

In all, only four boys graduate from the defensive unit and the offense doesn't lose much more. In addition, a good fresh crop plus junior college transfers are expected to give the returning regulars a run for starting berths.

The only other Wisconsin boy on the team is Jim Kresl of Crivitz, who was shifted from fullback to defensive end and a starter in the last several games. He is slated to be a regular next year.

The Hurricanes can use all the strength they can muster for next year's schedule again is rigid. They open against Florida State, which lost to LSU in the Peach Bowl, and the slate also includes Texas Christian, Florida, Navy, Houston, Alabama, North Carolina State, Memphis State and Wake Forest. Seven of the 10 will be played at home.

University of Miami Linebacker Dick Sorensen, shown with girl friend Marcia McGahey, spent the holiday vacation visiting his mother and relatives in Menasha. The Menasha High School alumnus was a regular on a Miami team which played six teams that participated in recent bowl games. For Miss McGahey, a Miami native, visiting in the North was a new experience for it was the first time she'd ever seen snow. (Post-Crescent Photo)

11-Point Victory Carleton Cagers Down Lawrence

NORTHFIELD, Minn. — The Lawrence basketball Vikings lost their fifth straight game by dropping a 52-51 decision to Carleton Saturday afternoon.

It was the Vikes' fourth Midwest Conference loss. Carleton won its seventh game in nine starts. The Carls are now 3-1 in the MC.

Carleton trailed most of the first half, but with about five minutes to go before intermission, took a lead which would not be challenged.

Undeclared Oles Hand Ripon Its 3rd Loss, 80-58

NORTHFIELD, Minn. (AP) — St. Olaf grabbed an early lead and rolled to an easy 80 to 58 victory over Ripon College in a Midwest Conference basketball action Saturday.

It was the fourth conference victory for the undefeated Oles. Tom Driscoll led the Oles' attack with 18 points and Allen Eggert got 14 for Ripon.

Nagel Paces U. S. Women In Ski Test

Men's Team Has Problems With Disqualifications

BERCHTESGADEN, Germany (AP) — American women, led by Judy Nagel of Enumclaw, Wash., continued their good showing in Alpine Ski World Cup competition Saturday, but their male teammates had problems again.

Following Kiki Cutter's victory in the giant slalom Friday, the American girls took four of the top seven places in the special slalom that was won by Gertrud Gabl of Austria.

Miss Nagel finished second at nearby Oberstaufen, covering the two runs in one minute, 16.31 seconds, almost a full second behind Miss Gabl's 1:15.72.

Marilyn Cochran of Richmond, Vt., was third in 1:16.80, Cathy Nagel, Judy's older sister, was sixth in 1:17.42 and Miss Cutter of BeZnd, Ore., was seventh in 1:17.62.

Seventy-six women from 12 nations competed in the 540-meter race, run with 40 gates in the first heat and 61 in the second.

At Berchtesgaden, Kurt Schindler of Switzerland won the men's giant slalom with a time of 1:28.53. Jean-Pierre Augert of France was second in 1:28.68 and Austria's Reinhard Tritschler was third in 1:28.74.

Rick Chaffee of Rutland, Vt., turned in the best American showing, finishing 17th with a time of 1:31.90. Jere Elliott of Steamboat Springs, Colo., was 18th in 1:32.03.

For the second day in a row, Billy Kidd of Stowe, Vt., Dennis McCoy of Bishop, Calif., and Hank Kashiwa of Old Forge, N.Y., were disqualified because of gate errors.

LaRusso, Mullins Picked on West NBA All-Star '5'

NEW YORK (AP) — Four players, including San Francisco's Rudy LaRusso and Jeff Mullins, were named Saturday to the West team for the National Basketball Association's All-Star game in Baltimore Jan. 14.

Dick VanArsdale of Phoenix and Joe Caldwell of Atlanta also were named, rounding out the 12-man squad selected by the league's coaches.

KING PIN capers

When the curtain rings down on the 1969 American Bowling Congress tournament here next May there is a good chance a host state tenpin star will carry off a championship.

There have been 50 Wisconsin bowlers capturing championships in ABC meets since the inaugural event in 1901.

The first Dairyland state winner was Dan Jones of Milwaukee taking the 1903 singles title at Indianapolis. The next champions were Al and Tony Schwoegler of Madison coming home from Pittsburgh with the 1909 doubles crown.

Wisconsin's first team title came in 1919 when the Athearn Hotel club of Oshkosh walked off with the five man laurels at Toledo. The following year at Peoria, Wisconsin had its first all events winner when Hall of Fame great Jimmy Smith from Milwaukee won the nine-game title.

Included in the Wisconsin championships are five team crowns, ten two-man titles, four in singles and three in all events.

Champions have come from Beloit, Green Bay, Sturgeon Bay and Hartford in addition to Milwaukee, Madison and Oshkosh.

Wisconsin bowlers have also turned in some record performances on ABC tournament lanes. The Pinky's Bowl team of Milwaukee rolled a 3,327 series in taking the 1967 Regular division title, an all-time high. Fred Weber of Milwaukee had a 768 set in his team appearance in 1934, the top three game series in team play.

When young Mike Putzer blasted a national honor count for the Oshkosh Recreation Lanes team last weekend, it was his ninth series over the 700 mark this season.

Putzer had games of 231, 247

Neenah Mann, Menasha Score Frosh Wins

Neenah Mann increased its Fox Valley Frosh League record to 5-0 Friday by beating intracity rival Conant, 57-50.

The winners built up a 16-9 first period lead and were on top, 27-21, and, 44-36, after the next two quarters.

Ed Hawley scored 25 points and Dene Storch had 18 for the winners. Jim Crist collected 19, Joe Vanevenhoven 13 and Bob Pansy 10 for Conant.

Menasha held on in the fourth period to edge Roosevelt, 41-39. The young Bluejays owned a 35-29 advantage after three quarters but were outscored, 10-6, in the fourth.

Chuck Abel netted 12 points and Tom Bohmke scored 11 for Menasha, while Dave Tebo hit 16 for Roosevelt.

Marie Suttner had an all-spare game of 180 in the Queen's Classic loop.

When Al Ziven rolled a 601 series last Monday in the Appleton Builders League at Hahn's Lanes, it marked the first time in 17 years of league bowling that he topped the 600 mark.

Clarence Bräsch had a 178 triplicate in the Tri-City League at the 41 Bowl last week.

There was a limited amount of league bowling in the last week or so because of the holidays. However, a pair of 6-7-10 split cleanups were reported including one by Barb Schultz in the Comic Couples League at Kimberly and another by Jack Van Lanen in the Fox Valley League at the Little Chute Recreation Lanes.

Personal Report: Well, the Blue Apple started the New Year off on the wrong foot for failing to get over the 500 mark Lanes team last weekend, it again. Ed Van Berkel figures I developed a kink in my elbow over the holidays and it will have to be worked out.

Skis Stuck in the Snow at View Ridge, New London, Saturday, indicate that the chalet was a most welcome place to seek occasional refuge from the sub-zero cold.

P-C Ski School Enthusiasm High Despite the Low Temperatures

BY ROGER PITT
Post-Crescent Staff Writer

It wasn't a record cold for the Post-Crescent Ski School Saturday morning, but that fact didn't impress the 300 tols and adults who showed up. It was just plain cold, regardless of records.

Instructors and students of all ages and abilities braved bone-chilling, teeth rattling, glove-and-shoe penetrating 10 or 11 below temperatures to take part in the first of two sessions.

About 125 students and instructors turned out at View Ridge near New London, and about 155 participated at Calumet County Park.

But many stayed home. Only about two-thirds of those registered for the school could muster the gumption to go outdoors.

The second and last session of the seventh annual school will be held at the same locations next week, and those who didn't make Saturday are most definitely welcome to appear.

The sun shone brightly and only a slight breeze swept across the hills. It was enough combined with deep-freeze temperatures to shorten the teaching sessions.

The air stung the nose and was enough to blister the

Orban and Hull Lead Hawk Win

Chicago Whips Montreal, 6-3, In NHL Contest

MONTREAL (AP) — Bill Orban and Bobby Hull spoiled Gump Worsley's return to the Montreal nets Saturday with two goals apiece, leading the Chicago Black Hawks to a 6-3 rout of the Canadiens in a nationally televised National Hockey League game.

Worsley, the 39-year-old veteran, whose jangled nerves forced him to the sidelines after his last appearance Nov. 23, was riddled for six straight goals after John Ferguson gave the Canadiens a quick 1-0 lead after a minute and three seconds.

Orban tied it up little more than a minute later with his second goal of the season and Keny Wharram put the Hawks ahead to stay at 10-31.

Orban then picked up a fluke goal midway through the second period when his passout from the corner went in off Worsley's skate. Four minutes later Hull scored his 26th goal of the season from just in front of the net, converting a perfect passout from Jim Pappin. Stan Mikita also assisted on Hull's first goal, his fourth assist of the game.

Chico Maki and Hull again made it 6-1 in the third period before Ted Harris and Yvan Cournoyer tallied for Montreal.

The triumph extended Chicago's string to four wins and a tie and ran the Hawks' record since goalie Denis DeJordy returned from the minors to 7-1-1. Montreal suffered its third loss in four starts. It was the Canadiens' worst home setback this season.

Douglass Leads 21-15 Victory

North Wins American All-Star Clash

By BEN FUNK
TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — Bobby Douglass, a blond southpaw from Kansas, threw a 51-yard bomb for one touchdown and ran for another Saturday and an alert, ball hawking North team beat the South 21-15 in the inaugural American Bowl All-Star football game.

On a soggy field, the North surged to a 21-0 lead in the fourth quarter before the South rose up to make it a suspense-filled finish on a touchdown by Edd Hargett of Texas A&M and a brilliant run by Eugene "Mercury" Morris of West Texas State.

Douglass, bouncing back from Kansas defeat by Penn State in last Wednesday's wild Orange Bowl game, put the Yankees in front in the first quarter by scoring on a two-yard keeper and made it 14-0 in the third with the long pass to Oklahoma's Eddie Hinton.

Greg Cook of Cincinnati iced the victory in the fourth with a 10-yard touchdown pass to Utah State's Mike O'Shea.

Pass to Lyons

With 1:20 to go, the South began its stirring comeback with Hargett's 24-yard scoring throw to Dicky Lyons of Kentucky and another pass to Lyons for two points.

Then Hargett led another drive ending when the fleet Morris the nation's No. 2 rushing leader behind Southern California's O.J. Simpson, found a big hole in the South line and darted 13 yards up the middle for a touchdown that made it a whole new ball game.

For the South team that made many serious threats it was a day of utter frustration as the Yankees intercepted five passes and pounced on three fumbles.

Rain and a last minute lifting of a local television blackout limited attendance to 16,380.

Eight minutes into the game, the North coach, Jack Mollen-

Mavericks Reported Sold To North Carolina Group

HOUSTON (AP) — The Houston Post said Saturday the Houston Mavericks may have been sold to a North Carolina group headed by J. C. Gardner of Greensboro.

George Mikan, commissioner of the American Basketball Association, said Thursday in Minneapolis that the Houston franchise had been sold but he said the names of the new owners would not be disclosed for about two weeks.

The Post said a reliable source in Greensboro indicated the franchise will be moved to that city after the 1969 season.

Namath Has Had Good Protection
Colt, Jet Lines Primed

By JACK HAND
NEW YORK (AP) — Broadway Joe Namath and shop-worn Earl Morrall will steal the headlines in next Sunday's Super Bowl game in Miami but the real battle will be fought in the pit between the faceless men who man the trenches for the New York Jets and Baltimore Colts.

The Las Vegas oddsmakers have made the Colts, champions of the National Football League, 17 - point favorites over the American Football League winners. The spread is somewhat surprising because the Green Bay Packers were only 14 points over Kansas City in 1967 and 15 over Oakland in 1968. However, the Packers whipped the Chiefs 35-10 and turned back the Raiders 33-14.

Namath's success in the third Super Bowl, starting at 2 p.m. CST, NBC-Radio-TV, will depend on the ability of the Jets' offensive line to keep the Colts' strong rush off his back. The Jets were able to give Namath, 5-foot-2 and 195 pounds, such fine protection during the regular season that he was dumped only 18 times in 14 games.

Job For Hill
It will be the job of Winston Hill, 6-6 280-pound tackle to keep Ordell Braase, 6 - 4, 245, a 12-year veteran, from smearing Namath as he had roughed up Cleveland's Bill Nelsen last week. 30b Talamini, 6-1, 255 an AFL veteran must take care of Fred Miller, 6-3, 250, regarded by many as the Colt's top defensive lineman. Center John Schmitt, 6-4, 245, will be occupied with either middle linebacker Denny Gaubatz, 6-2, 232, or a tackle.

On the other side of the line it will be Randy Rasmussen, 6-2, 255, a second-year pro, against Billy Ray Smith, a strong tackle who has been around 10 years. Dave Herman, 6-1, 255, will be blocking against Bubba Smith, 6-7, 295.

When Morrall, 6-2, 206, goes back to throw he will be counting on his offensive line of Bob Vogel, Glenn Ressler, Bill Curry Dan Sullivan and Sam Ball. Vogel, 6-5, 250, who will be playing with his broken left wrist in a cast, will be pitted against Verlon Biggs, 6-4, 268. Ressler, 6-3, 250, must handle John Elliott, 6-4, 249, a fine young tackle from Texas. Curry, 6-2, 235, may work against the middle linebacker, Al Atkinson, 6-2, 230, or a tackle.

Against Rochester
On the right side, it will be Sullivan 6-3, against Paul Rochester, 6-2, 250, and Bah 6-4, 240, against all-league Gerry Philbin, 6-2, 245.

The Colts have run the ball more this year with Morrall, instead of Unitas, at the controls. They scored all four touchdowns on the ground at Cleveland. Tom Matte, 6-0, 214, their versatile halfback who can run, catch and throw the ball, as well as block, is the big threat.

Jerry Hill, 5-11, 215, handicapped by injuries late in the season, is a supereor blocker and strong runner.

New York's running game accounted for 22 touchdowns, an AFL high, with fullback Matt Snell, 6-2, 219, doing the heavy

Illinois Crushes Gophers

CHAMPAIGN, Ill. (AP) — Unbeaten Illinois, rolling to a 10-0 record as the nation's eighth-ranked basketball team, opened its Big Ten season by crushing Minnesota 80-58 Saturday.

A sellout Assembly Hall crowd of 18,128-largest since Feb. 25, 1965—saw the flashy Illinois amass a 42-26 halftime lead after hitting at a .516 clip from the floor. The Gophers, 6-5, could come no closer than 16 points, 50-34, after that.

Illinois jumped into an 18-8 lead as Mike Price made four field goals and the momentum continued.

Stock Car Race Purses Increased by $750,000

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Competition was tough in top drawer stock car racing during 1968, but think what it will be like this year with an extra three-quarters of a million dollars in the 1969 prize kitty.

Firestone, written out of racing not long ago when it severed the long standing practice of exclusive driver contracts, let it be known it is very much in racing by offering the new $750,000 in awards, contingent upon use of its tires.

Cale Yarborough of Timmons-ville, S.C., set a record of $136,000 for driver winnings in the National Association for Stock Car Auto Racing in 1968.

One of the first drivers to learn of the new Firestone awards, James Hylton of Inman, S.C., estimated the top man could go as high as $350,000 this year.

The big money, old as well as new, is in the grand national division. That's where the late

Kansas Rallies For Victory

Jayhawks Win, 56-52, Behind Jo Jo White's 15

LINCOLN, Neb. (AP)—Fifth ranked Kansas recovered from a nine-point deficit in the second half and tripped Nebraska 56-52 Saturday in the Big Eight Conference opener for both teams.

Kansas, which led 33-26 at the half, took a 45-42 lead before Nebraska tied at 46 and 48. The Jayhawks held a 52-51 edge with 1:12 remaining when Nebraska's sophomore guard Cliff Holer double dribbled and Roger Brown scored for Kansas to clinch the victory.

Jo Jo White, the game's top scorer with 15 points, added three more free throws.

Kansas is now 12-1 and Nebraska 7-6.

Patriot Swim Team Beats Stevens Point

STEVENS POINT — Dave McArt won the 50 and 100-yard freestyle races to pace the Appleton East swimming team to a 48-47 win over Stevens Point Saturday afternoon.

Paul Downing won the diving event of the Patriots. The East 200-yard medley relay team also won its event. The members were Scott Duthie, Doug White, Bob Jensen, and Scott McArt.

Jeff Andrews was a double winner for Stevens Point, now 3-1 for the year, with triumphs in the 200- and 400-yard freestyle events. East is now 1-2 on the season.

Colts Favored By 18½ Points

NEW YORK (AP) — The Broadway betting gentry, who originally rated the Baltimore Colts of the National Football League as 17 point favorites over the New York Jets of the American League hiked the odds to 18½ points Saturday.

The Super Bowl game will be played in Miami's Orange Bowl Stadium on Sunday, Jan. 12.

SINGLE SHOT

by Jim Hark

Slowly the gun was brought up to the shoulder. Silently the hammer was pulled back. Softly the trigger was squeezed and then the silence of the swamp was shattered with the resounding report.

A blood curdling scream echoed across the canary grass, over the hills and pierced the walls of every saloon.

Men with elbows draped on the bar bowed their heads until their noses were almost in the foam. They recognized the scream and they knew what had happened.

Women unlocked the doors, ushered little children to the front porch and then started shaking out rugs heavy with accumulated dust.

The next days newspapers, radio and television carried accounts of the happening and spread the story across the nation: "Ramu Kirdishan has rid the Fremont area of the yeti."

Ramu was set up as a national hero. The little Himalayan who had traveled thousands of miles to take part in the one-day managed yeti hunt was a bit bashful about the accomplishment, but finally consented to tell his story of the hunt at a news conference.

As reporters stood by with pencils poised, tape recorders revolved and TV cameras ground away, Ramu opened his mouth and said:

"Insta rafum sercondo rolsta perdoni electi quosa. . ."

It was at this point that a Fremont bartender took over and interpreted Ramu's words for the waiting public.

"When I fired my single charge of rock-salt the yeti was approximately 50 feet away. I had stalked him for 45 minutes after first sighting him eating canary grass and washing it down with a can of beer.

"As I crept close for the shot I had to be very careful because my purple and yellow polka dot arm band kept getting tangled in the brush. Once I lost my yeti tag, but was lucky enough to find it when I back-tracked. My seven page yeti permit folder also caused a problem because I had read only the first five pages of fine print and was worried that their might have been some rules I was overlooking.

"When I was right up close to the yeti I could hear him mumbling something to himself about having half of the nation buffaloeed about this thing. Lucky for me when I was close enough to shoot, his posterior was turned my way. Fur flew in seven different directions and he took off at a speed I have never seen before."

Little Ramu just grinned when the story was over and he accepted the well wishes of the other 4,283 hunters who had been lucky enough to be picked by computer for the hunt.

Slowly people began to leave the community and head for their homes. Many had driven hundreds of miles to see the developments of the yeti hunt and one small boy with an adding machine had figured that there were 64,364 people in Fremont that day.

The last that was seen of the yeti was a report by short wave radio from a small Polynesian island which had nearly been inundated by a tidal wave caused when the yeti flashed by, swimming back to his native Himalayan mountains.

Institute Cites State Report About Trout Stream Habitat

MADISON — A Department of Natural Resources (DNR) research report on trout stream habitat in Wisconsin has been cited by Sport Fishing Institute as "destined to become a desk-reference item in the office of every up-to-date trout manager."

The 64-page report by Ray J. White and Oscar M. Brynildson, biologists in DNR's Bureau of Research, was released last year. It is based on trout habitat field studies in Wisconsin dating continuously from 1954.

Partly financed by Dingell-Johnson funds, the report summarized findings by a number of fishery biologists in Wisconsin.

Among them were the following:

Trout habitat management should be tailored to individual streams. The natural character of streams and their landscapes should be preserved and restored to improve the quality of angling.

Habitat managers, concerned with the "health of the stream," can help nature repair itself through relatively inexpensive measures such as eliminating dams and protecting some stream banks against livestock.

Control, as well as protection, of stream bank vegetation may help maintain favorable trout habitat, especially where natural channels shelter fish.

Water should be kept moving in streams with low grades. Habitat managers can speed the flow by removing dams and other obstacles, but meanders should be kept intact.

Plunge pools should be created in high gradient streams. Fish find quiet, protected resting places at the bottoms of these pools.

Trout spawning is better aided by protecting gravel already in the stream, rather than depositing new gravel.

Floods should be combated by reducing runoff in the drainage basin above the stream, not by merely reinforcing stream banks.

Bernese and Orphaned Fawn 'Popeye.'

'Popeye' Is Sleeping

Bernese is the St. Bernard at the Northernaire Resort near Eagle River and in this story the dog takes the part of the first person revealing his feelings about the orphaned fawn "Popeye."

I went into the woods and brought my four little orphaned fawns out on the hotel lawn. They are named Peter, Calamity Jane, Boots and Popeye.

Popeye's mother was killed on the highway when he was two days old. He was born blind in one eye, and I have been his only mother since the twenty-eighth of May. I paid more attention to him because he was blind in one eye, and I thought he needed more care than the others. People from the hotel came out with me and talked to and petted my four fawns. I then took the fawns back into the woods where they would be safe and came back to the hotel.

Scared Fawns

I heard a loud noise in the woods, and ran toward the noise. I saw four men with numbers on their backs. I guess the noise scared the other three fawns, because the only one there was Popeye, and he was sleeping, and one of the men with numbers on his back was running toward him.

I thought something was wrong so I ran back to the hotel to get the boss. I heard him say, "Block the road." Cornell and Rollie blocked the road, so the men could not drive their car out. They came up the road, but could not get out, and Popeye was sleeping on the back of their car, with his legs tied.

The boss was mad, and he talked real loud and used words that I had never heard before. He told them to get out of the car, take the rope off of Popeye's legs, and lay him in the snow alongside of the road. He told them a lot of things that I did not understand, and he was real mad. He said something about not only a closed area, but a refuge, called them savages and many other things that I cannot tell you.

More Compassion

He said I had more compassion in the tip of my tail than all of them put together would ever have. He told them to look at me, and that they might learn a badly needed lesson in compassion. I don't know what compassion means, but maybe you do.

Popeye was sleeping with his legs stretched out. I had never seen him sleep like this before. I nudged him, but he would not wake up. I licked his face. Then I lay down next to him, waiting for him to wake up and play.

Then the boss said, "Come on with me, Bernie, you have had enough for one day." By this time, Mike and John came, and he said, "Hold these guys. If they make a move, we will hold court here on the road." They waited for quite a while, and then the Policeman came and then the Game Warden came. The Game Warden took Popeye in his car, and he was still sleeping, and he told the men with the numbers on their backs that they were going to jail and after about an hour they left, and the woods were quiet again.

Nowhere Around

My other three orphans, Jane, Peter and Boots, must have been frightened by the noise, because they were nowhere around I wanted to find them, but the boss took me into the hotel and into his room, and told me they would be back. I put my head on his knee, and he looked out of the window. It was getting dark. He talked real slow, and stopped talking every once in a while. He said he wished more people would take an example from me when it comes to animals, and he told me that I had mothered thirty-three orphans in the last two years. I did not remember how many there were that I took care of in the woods and on the lawn, but I know there were wolves, poodles, foxes, mink, fawns and a lot of raccoons.

Many of them still come in from the woods to see me, and I play in the woods every night with one of the baby wolves I raised two years ago. He is a big wolf now, but he won't come out of the woods to let people see him, and the boss says this is good.

Won't Be Back

I asked him when Popeye would wake up, and if he would come back. He said, "No, he won't be back, but don't worry about him. He won't be cold this winter." If he was cold, I could lie close to him and keep him warm. Whenever I lay close to my fawns, they always had their legs tucked under them. Popeye had his stretched out straight. Maybe he found a new way to sleep. I hope wherever he is that they will be good to him, because he can only see out of one eye.

It got dark, and I could see my other three orphaned fawns against the white snow. I wanted to go out to them, and the boss let me go. I think the loud noise in the woods scared them, and they were looking for Popeye.

I will tell them what the boss told me about him, and tell them to stay close to me and they will not fall asleep with their legs stretched out. I know they miss Popeye as much as I do. I will still look for him in the woods. Maybe he will wake up and find his way back home. If you should see him please let me know as he might have trouble getting home with one eye.

Snowmobiles In Use Reach 41,000 Total

MADISON (AP) — Wisconsin residents have $41 million tied up in snowmobiles, and the number of enthusiasts using the vehicle is increasing faster than skiers.

A University of Wisconsin extension recreation specialist, Larry Monthey, reporting results of a survey today, noted that one of every 100 state residents owns such a machine. There were 27,000 snowmobiles in the state last year. The figure now, Monthey said, is 41,000.

Sixty-one of Wisconsin's 72 counties have snowmobile trails. There are nearly 15 million acres opened to snowmobiling. This is 30 per cent more than last year.

Minnesota, Michigan and New York are other states where the sport is booming, Monthey said.

Calendar of Events Sent Out by State

MADISON — Snowmobile races in January, sport shows in March, apple-blossom time in May and an entire summer of festivals.

That's a sample of what's going on in Wisconsin during 1969, from the Calendar of Events for the new year just released by the Vacation and Travel Service of the Department of Natural Resources.

The longest listings are for June through September, months when Wisconsin communities celebrate their historical and ethnic traditions with festivals, pageants and contests.

Sports enthusiasts will find canoe races, sports car competition, curling bonspiels, and coyote hunts on the list. Chicken barbecues, cheese days, trout boils, steer roasts, smorgasbords and venison feeds will appeal to gourmets. Symphony of the Hills at Governor Dodge State Park, and the famed Peninsula Music Festival at Fish Creek will interest music buffs.

Copies of "Wisconsin's Calendar of Events, 1969" are available free from the Vacation and Travel Service in Madison (Box 450, 53701), Milwaukee (161 W. Wisconsin Ave., 53203), Minneapolis (222 Cargill Building, 55402) and Chicago (205 N. Michigan Ave., 60601).

Snow Causes Trouble Wildlife Problems

BY JIM HARP
Post-Crescent Outdoor Editor

Snow may create beautiful winter scenes and bring smiles to the faces of ski enthusiasts, but for Wisconsin's already beleaguered wildlife it's strictly "bad news."

Conservation wardens Dale Morey of Outagamie County and Rex Oatman of Waupaca County, both echoed the same sentiments about the winter situation.

At the present time there is no major problem for deer since they have a sufficient supply of browse. However, the outlook for the rest of the winter months is not good.

Small game is not faring too well, however, and both wardens are cooperating in programs for the supplying of food for pheasants.

Feeding Project

In Outagamie County, Morey pointed out that the Outagamie Conservation Club has an active winter feeding project going for pheasants. Corn is available and persons who would like to get a supply for feeding can contact Morey or Vern Plamann, Greenville, who is heading up the project.

"One thing is important about a feeding program," Morey warned. "Don't start it and then abandon it, you have to keep it going."

Morey also pointed out that just throwing cobs of corn out in the snow will not do much good either. The warden suggested that anyone interested in feeding pheasants or Hungarian partridge should make a feeding board. This simple device consists of a wide board which will sit on top of the snow. Spikes or large nails are driven up through the board so cobs of corn can be stuck on the nails in an upright position.

Get at Corn

This enables wildlife to get at the corn and it does not become buried in the snow.

Both wardens suggested that feeding of wildlife should be done in sheltered areas, away from roads so the game will not be vulnerable to automobiles and poachers.

In Waupaca County, Oatman said there are no major problems that he knows of at the present time.

"Later on, I'm afraid we may have some trouble if we can't get rid of some of this snow. And I don't see how we're going to get rid of it either," Oatman added.

The Waupaca warden said that farmers are feeding pheasants at the present time and he is supplying corn to those who request it.

Special Plea

Both wardens issued a special plea to dog owners to keep their animals tied up this winter. They pointed out that the snow makes for hard going as deer break through easily and packs of dogs have been known to kill many deer in a single day.

State law provides that dogs chasing deer can be shot. As the winter wears on, and the snow gets deeper, the does become heavy with fawns and are particularly vulnerable to dogs which can run on top of the crusted snow.

The wardens issued warnings to would-be ice fishermen also. Oatman pointed out some parts of the Chain O'Lakes at Waupaca have open water where there is current and all lakes in the area are still classed as "unsafe." The heavy snow cover also is expected to cause winter-kill of fish in shallow waters such as White Lake at Weyauwega and Partridge Lake at Fremont.

Morey said that some spots on Lake Winnebago still have less than two inches of ice under the heavy snow cover.

"Without a January thaw and then some more cold weather, there may be no automobile travel on Winnebago all this winter," the warden said.

Beer Truck, Deer Crash Results in Possible Record Damage Total

MADISON — A possible new record for property damage in a deer-vehicle accident was established Dec. 10 when a semi-trailer truck loaded with case beer hit an eight-point buck on Interstate 94.

The impact of the collision bent the truck bumper, forcing it back against the wheel and throwing the entire vehicle out of control. The truck tipped over into the median strip, causing almost complete loss of tractor, trailer and cargo.

The driver was not injured, but his relief driver, asleep in a bunk in the rear of the cab, sustained head injuries.

The deer, one of at least 12,000 to be involved in collisions on Wisconsin highways this year, was killed.

Twenty-Eight Leaders Convene
Old British Empire Gathers
Tuesday in Summit Meeting

By DAVID LANCASHIRE
LONDON (AP) — Like a family reunion, the old British empire reassembles here Tuesday in its modern, unraveled form. Twenty-eight leaders from the independent states that make up the world's biggest, oldest—and vaguest regular summit meeting. Unlike other summit meetings, it isn't supposed to make formal decisions, and the organization at times seems uncertain why it exists at all.

Gun of Soap Aids Escape
4 Inmates Flee
Mississippi Jail,
Release Hostages

HOPEWELL, Miss. (AP) — Sheriff Fred Thomas headed a search today for four armed prisoners who had held him and two co-workers as hostage after breaking from the Hinds County jail at Jackson.

Thomas was released unharmed along with James Hartzog, the jailer, and John Mowdy, a radioman, 90 minutes after the break Thursday night. The prisoners were identified as Kenneth Albert Bankston, 35, of Harrisville, Willie Lewis Price, 24, of Bassfield, James Ralph Murphy, 37, of Jackson, and John Wallace Brooks, 21, of Jackson.

The men carried a gun carved from soap and colored with shoe polish. They reportedly took two pistols from a desk in the cell block on the top floor of the courthouse, then took Hartzog down an elevator to the second floor. There they forced Thomas and Mowdy to accompany them to the sheriff's car.

The hostages were released on a country road about 35 miles south of Jackson. The escapees took Thomas' two-day-old car, his revolver and about $270. The sheriff went to a house and summoned aid while Hartzog and Mowdy returned to Jackson.

Thomas stayed to direct a search party of about 200 federal, state and county authorities. His car was found late Thursday concealed behind bushes near Hopewell.

"They treated me well," Thomas said of his captors. "I was just real thankful. They could have thrown me in the river."

A high speed chase took place along Interstate 55 before the hostages were released. The escapees monitored radio messages as they sped south in the police car.

Thomas said a deputy pulled up behind the car and one of the prisoners told Thomas to radio the deputy to back off.

Prime ministers and officials from the 28 states include robed chieftains and business-suited nationalists from Africa, Caribbean, and Asia or the Caribbean, and personalities as different as bearded Archbishop Makarios of Cyprus and Canada's Pierre Elliott Trudeau.

Some of them think they may not stay together much longer. Some sources close to the British government agree that swelling pressures could collapse the whole Commonwealth structure.

Trudeau has been quoted as calling the Commonwealth outdated. Malaysia's Tunku Abdul Rahman has accused Britain of "leaving the Commonwealth without proper leadership."

Enthusiasm for the Commonwealth inside Britain's own ruling Labor party "reached a low water mark" more than a year ago, said the London Times. Many Britons regard special relations with the former empire not as an asset but as an anchor around Britain's neck in its bid to enter the European Common Market.

Some former advocates of the Commonwealth in the Conservative party, who saw it as a means of preserving the impression of an empire, now say Britain must free itself from the entanglement. For one thing, they see it as a threat because of thousands of immigrants it sends pouring into Britain.

Wilson has noted wistfully that while some Commonwealth members trumpet their independence with jealous ferocity they assail Britain for asserting its own independence on controversial issues.

With these varying viewpoints, plus problems like Rhodesia and the war in Nigeria, how can any worthwhile agreement be expected at the secret summit sessions starting Tuesday?

The answer is that under the Commonwealth's rules, no agreement is necessary. The leaders meet to talk, advise and argue, and to explain each other's viewpoints. Any member who dislikes the conversation is free to dismiss the topic under discussion, or to walk out. Commonwealth meetings do not aim primarily at forming common policies or joint action. "The objective," said Lord Normanbrook, former secretary to the summit meetings, "has always been to reach the highest measure of understanding; not the lowest measure of agreement."

Queen Elizabeth II, nominal head of the alliance and still monarch of a dozen members, says the aim is to "foster the Commonwealth connection on a basis of racial equality and close consultation" and "promote Commonwealth collaboration in trade, economic development, educational, scientific and cultural contacts."

As an alliance, the Commonwealth is a pyramid of contradictions. It has no joint military agreements—but members help each other out. Former colonies have called back British troops to quell unrest in their own armies, and the organization banded together to provide more than two-thirds of the U.N. force in the Congo. Two members, Pakistan and India, have fought a war against each other.

It has no common law—Mauritius follows French rules and Ceylon has a Roman-Dutch system—but English law is looked up to throughout the far-flung member countries, and many a stifling English wig. It has no common citizenship, but residents of one Commonwealth country usually have little trouble entering the others. It has trade preferences and agreements, any member wanting to do business with outsiders like the Soviet Union or China is free to do so.

There are education, aid and technical programs, but none of the members is bound by them. The beginnings of the nebulous alliance go back to 1839 when the Canadian and Britain feared they might rebel as the United States had done. This led to a new system of home government in Canada, Australia, New Zealand and South Africa.

These countries became independent—but except for South Africa—remained under the British crown, recognizing the sovereign as a nominal chief of state.

The present multiracial Commonwealth began with the independence of India and Pakistan in August of 1947. They and other British colonies given independence after World War II were allowed to join the Commonwealth or not. By 1958 there were 10 member states. The figure has swollen to 28 since then, not counting South Africa, which dropped out after its racial policy came under fire at a 1961 meeting.

Malaysia, Malta, Mauritius, New Zealand, Nigeria, Pakistan, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Swaziland, Tanzania, Trinidad, Tobago, Uganda and Zambia.

Biggest Issue
The biggest issue facing them this week is Rhodesia. African leaders are expected to press Britain to use force to bring down Premier Ian Smith's rebel regime. The Rhodesian issue has hampered relations between black and white Commonwealth members, and is the reason no Commonwealth summit has been held since 1966.

The war in Nigeria is another center of argument, with Canada and Australia trying to stop British arms supplies there. Immigration into Britain is a

Coal Miners' Strike
In Spain Paralyzes
Government Industry

MADRID (AP) — Three months of strikes by miners protesting safety conditions and wages have paralyzed the Asturian coal country, the Spanish news agency Pyresa as reported.

More than 4,500 miners struck prickly problem, plus questions such as Britain's military withdrawal from Asia.

But "the very nature of the present-day Commonwealth precludes the possibility of the formulation of a central policy," says an official British government spokesman.

400 Oppose Delivery
Of Mail by 'Ousider'

MILFORD, Conn. (AP) — A rural mail carrier here has withdrawn his application for a transfer to Seabrook, N.H., after more than 400 residents of Seabrook petitioned against having their mail delivered by an "outsider."

John R. Borkowski turned down the new job last week, a day before he was to take over a rural route in Seabrook, where he formerly lived. Seabrook Postmaster Oliver L. Carter said residents had forwarded their petition to the Boston postal region office.

NOTES and NOTIONS

Next Sunday, the defense of National Football League prestige in general, and the Western Conference's reputation, in particular, will be in good hands. Cut from much the same cloth as Green Bay's Super Bowl champions of 1967 and '68, the Baltimore Colts should win the 1969 Miami classic by much the same kind of margin. The Jets are explosive and "hungry," but they don't strike one as being a better all-around club than the Chiefs were in the 1967 Super Bowl or the Raiders were last year. Most observers consider the Oakland team of last year the best one the AFL has turned out to date. At any rate, the current Colts are awesome on defense and machine-like on game will become somewhat inflated, and the stampeding Colts might even smudge his white shoes. But, win or lose, the colorful Namath belongs to the last-disappearing breed that adds zest to any game.

After the first half of this year's Rose Bowl game, O. J. Simpson seemed pretty sure of erasing Bob Jeter's rushing record. But he was able to add only 34 yards to his first half total of 137, so Jeter's Rose Bowl record of 194 yards remains intact. Jeter, now a defensive ace for the Packers, set his offensive mark 10 years ago as an Iowa half-back.

Southern Cal had Simpson, but Ohio State had top-drawer football players in far greater abundance. Seldom has the Pasadena classic seen a team with such depth and balance — and, of course, youth — as the Buckeyes displayed. And, quarterback Rex Kern should easily qualify for the magicians' union with his ball-handling prowess. Barring a rash of injuries, "junior-itis" or "senior-itis" the sophomore-accented Buckeyes should tower above the collegiate football world for two more years. But, then, nothing is certain in sports. Indiana's Rose Bowl team of last year also was keeled by sophs, but Hoosier accomplishments in the latest Big 10 season diminished markedly. But, the last two Big 10 seasons have exploded the old belief that only heavily-experienced teams can be champions. You can't keep a good athlete down, whether he be a soph, a junior or a senior.

The Appleton Foxes will head into their 12th year of operation with their third president, Jerry Patterson. Patterson has tough acts to follow, because his predecessors, Ray McClone and Bob Rahn, gave the position the kind of interest and dedication it requires. Without the untiring efforts of such unsalaried executives as Rahn and McClone, and such full-time salaried business managers as Bob Willis and Ed Holtz, professional baseball probably couldn't have survived here. Thus far, the Foxes have been fortunate in the type of leadership they've had.

If Roberto Di Vincenzo and Peter Fuller (Dancer's Image) ever decide to form a "What Might Have Been" society, they can hardly avoid inviting the entire Oakland Raider and University of Kansas football teams to membership. Fate deprived each of them of an apparent victory or a strong chance for victory. A mental lapse — the famous 12th-man incident — took away an apparent Orange Bowl win from Kansas (over Penn State). Oakland was driving toward a winning touchdown against the Jets in the AFL title game when a combination mental-physical error took place on the New York 12-yard line. Daryle Lamone's badly-thrown lateral bounced around, and neither the intended receiver nor any other Raider reacted quickly enough to recover. The choice of the play itself was debatable, of course, since the Raiders, with more than two minutes left, had time to turn loose their strong running game — a less risky weapon.

Viking Bench Plans Cage 'Smoker'

Lawrence University varsity basketball players and coaches will be guests at a smoker sponsored by the Viking Bench, Lawrence sports booster group. Tuesday on the campus.

The event will feature an "open practice" at 7:15 p.m. at Alexander Gym, to be followed by a social hour at 8 p.m. at the Lou Calder Student Center of the Institute of Paper Chemistry, at 2 Mahler Ct.

New head coach John Poulson will direct the practice session in preparation for Lawrence's game on Friday with Knox College. After the social hour, Poulson will discuss his team's prospects for the season.

Co-chairmen of the event are Dan Cloud and Thomas B. McKenzie. The evening's activities will include refreshments, awarding of door prizes and the presentation of the Viking Bench's "Mr. Defense" award to a member of the Vikings' 1968 football team.

GREEN BAY — Packer retirement?

Latest indications are there will be fewer than originally predicted when the National Football League's triple champions were formally dethroned in December.

Most of those concerned, vacationing or pursuing business interests, were not readily available for comment over the weekend but Chuck Lane, Packers publicity director, reported no official retirement announcements have been received at Lombardi Avenue headquarters thus far.

He then proceeded to itemize the situation: —Offensive Captain Bob Skoronski "will not decide until the approach of the 1969 season."

He should telephone their reservations to Sampson Alumni House, on the Lawrence campus. The smoker is open to all interested fans without admission charge.

No Packers Have Officially Retired

—Defensive tackle Henry Jordan: "It is felt that he feels he may want to give it another try."

—Guard Jerry Kramer: "He is undecided."

—Offensive tackle Forrest Gregg: "It is hoped Forrest will be back."

—Defensive Captain Willie Davis: "It is felt Willie will be back."

Quarterback Zeke Bratkowski: "We are not certain what his plans are."

After Pro Bowl In the case of Gregg, Lane added, "He tells us he hopes to come to a decision after the Pro Bowl game."

Gregg, an all-pro for eight consecutive years prior to 1968, is scheduled to make his ninth Pro Bowl appearance in Los Angeles, Jan. 19.

The Packers also will be represented by halfback Donny Pope, Zeke Bratkowski, Ron Anderson, flanker Carroll Dale Kostelnik, Bill Lueck, Ken Bowman, Jim Flanigan, Forrest Bratkowski, 37-year-old veteran of 12 pro seasons, has been listed as a "logical candidate" to succeed Tom Mc Cormick as the Packer offensive backfield coach, a situation which obviously could influence his decision.

No move to fill the position is expected, however, for at least two weeks. General manager Vince Lombardi is vacationing in Florida and is not expected to return until after the Jan. 15 Super Bowl.

The Packer basketball team, soon to hit the hardwoods, will have one of the most imposing rosters in its history.

Doug Hart, the team's booking agent, lists a 15-man squad, including are Boyd Dowler, Jim Weatherwax, Ray Nitschke, Bucky Bowman, Jim Flanigan, Forrest Gregg, Bob Skoronski and Hart.

the Packer cagers will make their season bow at Viola, Wis., Feb. 1.

Tight end Marv Fleming will tour Vietnam bases later in the month, in company with ex-Packer Steve Wright, now of the New York Giants; center Jim Otto of the Oakland Raiders, a Wausau, native. They will be accompanied by NBC sportscaster Charlie Jones.

Art Rooney, owner of the Pittsburgh Steelers, says four coaches — "two of them in the college ranks and two of them in the pros" — are under consideration to succeed Bill Austin as coach of the Steelers.

He indicated George Allen, depicted as coach of the Rams a week ago, would be added to the list. . . . one of the college prospects, it is reported, is Lou Paterno, coach of unbeaten Penn State last minute winners of the Orange Bowl game. One source claims Paterno has been offered a four-year contract at $70,000 per year.

Falcons Add Yowarsky to Coaching Staff

ATLANTA, Ga. (AP) — Veteran National Football League Coach Walt Yowarsky was named offensive backfield coach today of the Atlanta Falcons.

Yowarsky, 40, is the third assistant selected by head Coach Norm Van Brocklin since the close of the 1968 season.

Earlier, Marion Campbell was named defensive coach and Duane Putnam offensive line coach.

For the past two seasons, Yowarsky has handled the offensive line for the New Orleans Saints. He served in the same capacity the previous six years under Van Brocklin at Minnesota. He came to the Vikings after two years as a scout and assistant coach with the New York Giants.

Yowarsky is a native of Cleveland. He and his wife Bobbie, have two children.

Paustian

A veteran, heady quarterback like Earl Morrall can probably cut apart the Jet pass defense, just as Bart Starr did so masterfully against the Chiefs and the Raiders. Morrall and Starr have more in common than their number — 15.

The Colts erased all doubt about their ability with the 34-0 shellacking of Cleveland. It was the most one-sided NFL playoff game since the Packers polished off the Giants, 37-0, in 1961. That Green Bay win was the beginning of almost unbroken Western Conference domination. Western teams have won the title in seven of the last eight years — with Cleveland's 1964 win over Baltimore representing the only Eastern triumph. It's definitely the Western era in pro football generally. Of the six teams that have qualified for the first three Super Bowl games, the Jets are the only Eastern sector team to make the grade.

A year ago, Morrall was concerned mainly about staying on the Giants' — or any pro team's — roster. Starting status and Super Bowl games apparently had passed him by. In his wildest dreams, he couldn't imagine that he would not only play in the 1969 Super Bowl contest but that he would replace John Unitas as a starter and would enter the game as the NFL's most valuable player. The rise of Morrall from a "forgotten man" status to the role of leader of the world's top-rated pro team won't easily be duplicated as a success story. Morrall's counterpart, Joe Namath — who is considered the MVP of his league — is an opposite in almost every way but passing proficiency. Namath, pro football's most flamboyant player since Paul Hornung, has never been out of the limelight since entering the AFL four years ago. As the first of football's "superbonus" players, Namath has lived up to his collegiate reputation — unlike a number of other All-Americans of recent years. However, Broadway Joe hasn't faced the kind of a defense he'll contend with next Sunday. Chances are that his average of being decked only once a

Jordan Hoping Cowboys Can Prove Something in Playoff

By RALPH BERNSTEIN

Associated Press Sports Writer
MIAMI (AP) — Lee Roy Jordan says he has to prove something to himself. He says the Dallas Cowboys have to prove something to themselves.

Jordan, a 225-pound linebacker for the Cowboys, figures today against the Minnesota Vikings in the National Football League's playoff game is as good a time as any to find some answers.

The 27-year-old Jordan, in his sixth year of professional football, admits he still is a little numb from losing the Eastern Conference title playoff to Cleveland two weeks ago.

"We've got to win this one, the Playoff Bowl, to prove to ourselves and other people we have what it takes to come back."

Jordan has heard that the Cowboys can't win the big ones. He says Dallas has to start its comeback now. "We can't wait until next season. That's too far away."

Dallas won the NFL's Capitol Division with a 12-2 record. The Cowboys were favored to beat Cleveland but lost 31-20.

Hard to Take

"It took quite a while," said Jordan, "for me to get over it. It was hard to live with. I was moody, didn't want to talk to anybody or see anyone. I didn't want to entertain in my home."

Jordan said that finally he decided there was nothing he could do about it, so he went out and played some golf. "My golf was so terrible that I forgot about football," he said.

The 6-foot-1 linebacker, who played for Alabama before turning pro, expects the Cowboys to win big before an expected 50,000 fans at the Orange Bowl.

"It really boils down to pride," he said.

Oklahoma State Selects Gass As Grid Coach

STILLWATER, Okla. (AP) — Oklahoma State University named Floyd Gass head football coach Saturday to replace the ousted Phil Cutchin.

Gass, 41, is an OSU graduate. He has been head coach at Austin College in Sherman, Tex., since 1961.

Cutchin was fired Dec. 11 after six losing seasons.

Gass received a four-year contract.

His Austin College team posted an 8-1 record during the 1968 season. His eight-year record at the Texas school was 43-28-1.

The Wisconsin state assembly, in action in the state capitol at Madison, is pictured in today's cover photo by Tim Wyngaard, of The Post-Crescent's Madison bureau. The "lower" house of the state legislature is now at its maximum numerical size of 100 members, under terms of the state constitution. There are 33 members of the state senate. John Wyngaard, veteran capitol correspondent, tells how the average citizen can make an impact on the state's lawmakers in a story starting on page 5.

'Blackness Doesn't Exist...'

A First-Hand Account
By WSU-O's Advisor to Culturally Distinct Students

By James W. McKee

Events and developments on the WSU-O campus prior to and since Nov. 21 have left many people with a number of questions. The following article hopefully will answer some of these questions and perhaps give Post-Crescent readers another view of the situation.

The events of Nov. 21 involving the WSU-O black students did not spring up overnight. For nearly two years, black students have been requesting changes similar to those on the sheet presented to President Guiles on Nov. 21. Perhaps you will recall reading articles describing what the students felt were unfair grading practices last spring. Members of the Black Student Union at that time approached several faculty members with questions about what they felt were discriminatory practices in grading. Phillip Layne, my assistant and at that time a student, says he thought the black students were not in solid agreement and did not feel they were ready to go to the President with this concern.

In late September of this year, however, black students began meeting to discuss their situation. They chose to remain a segregated organization and therefore could not apply for official campus recognition. I feel that if they had integrated, they would have then become just another dissatisfied group, but by remaining segregated and black they were unique. It should be pointed out that there are several segregated campus groups, including all the fraternities and sororities, all of whom have official recognition. Their rules provide for integration, but their practices do not. Needless to say, this is a form of built-in racism.

On Oct. 15 the following list of demands was drawn up by the Black Student Union:

1. Afro-American Center
Equivalent to sorority or fraternity house.
2. Black Professors and Courses
 - A. History
 1. Afro-American History
 - B. Literature
 - C. Language
3. Black Student Fund
Purpose: To get black speakers to come to our campus.
To buy black literature for our black students.
To finance Afro-American Center.

On the evening of Oct. 16, the BSU presented a similar list of demands to me to present to the administration. I presented them to University Registrar, Dr. Jorgenson, and the next day the Advisory Committee for the Program for Culturally Distinct Groups was assigned the task of investigating these concerns and making a recommendation to the President. This Committee met with approximately 20 black students on Oct. 22. The students explained their demands and the Advisory Committee, a group of 13 faculty members, unanimously recommended adoption and implementation of these demands. The President, after some questions, approved our recommendation and on Oct. 25, notice of his decision was sent to the leaders of the BSU.

Upon reading about the "demands", many whites thought the blacks were calling for special consideration and privileges. The black students saw the introduction of the black experience in its proper place into the curriculum as the only way to really say we are teaching the true story of America. By checking the course outlines of many of the appropriate

The author of this article is James W. McKee, Director of Programs for Culturally Distinct Groups, and the only American-born, full-time, black faculty member at Wisconsin State University-Oshkosh.

Concerned parents marched from the Newman Center on the WSU-O campus to meet President Roger Guiles, following a strategy conference on Dec. 2. The meeting took place after black students appeared in Winnebago County Court Branch 3 to answer charges resulting from a disturbance in the administration building Nov. 21. (Post-Crescent Photo)

As I stated before, the University administration had approved this plan.

On Nov. 21, as you know, the black students went to the President with a sheet of paper which they asked him to sign indicating his support for the demands, and it asked for a progress report on how things were coming on Friday, Nov. 22, at 10:30 a.m. The following is an exact copy of the paper presented to Dr. Guiles:

41 / 257 5220 WSU WISCONSIN STATE UNIVERSITY, OSHKOSH, WISCONSIN 54901

ADDRESSEE: Roger E. Guiles, President

Your signature on this paper will signify your assurance that our demands will be met and in evidence at or before the beginning of the next semester.

In reiteration, Black Student Union demands are that you:

1. Remove Mr. Spittler from his present position and any related capacity.
2. Provide a structure and furnishings for the Cultural Center (which is so eagerly accepted by your administrators).
3. Hire Black instructors.
4. Implement a course in the following areas of Black culture:
 History Literature
 Language
5. Activate a Black Student Fund which will be used to secure Black speakers, purchase Black literature, and to aid the financing of the Afro-American Center.

We place full implementation of our demands in your hands. Black students will not be involved in a lengthy dialogue as to how these demands will be met. We expect a written report on what concrete form our demands will assume placed on the desk of our counselors by Friday, November 22, no later than 10:30 a.m.

Signed _____
 Dr. Roger E. Guiles, President

Witnessed _____

Date: () & _____

The paper did not ask the President to create a Cultural Center through an act of magic. The real problem developed when the President began questioning whether or not a segregated facility could be set up. This showed the President did not know what the original demands called for, because the Center was to be the exact opposite of a segregated facility. I am not surprised the President did not sign the paper, but I feel he could have verbally agreed to furnish the report on Friday. Recognizing the sincere concern of the students, I think I would have said, "I will not sign your paper, but I will give you my word as a man that I will have a report for you tomorrow. In exchange, I'm asking you to end your demonstration and in the future come to see me before our relations are strained to this extent."

The details of what happened after the President refused to sign have been reported over and over. Still, I feel there has been little attempt by anyone to find out why such an incident would take place. The parents, 93 in number, asked for an investigation of the entire situation on Nov. 25. To my knowledge, as yet no one has taken this suggestion. However, various damage figures have been used by the press. The range is from $3,000 to $30,000. The University released a list of damaged items on Nov. 26. However, they made the mistake of listing the costs of these items as though they were all totally destroyed. Upon investigation, Mr. Layne and I found three desks listed as destroyed in one office that were in use and had only been scratched. In another office five of the 12 typewriters said to have been destroyed had been repaired at a cost of $80.52. Three others were only upset and suffered little if any damage, and four were in need of extensive repair. These typewriters were listed as costing $3600. The desks now in use cost $560. What would be found if one made a thorough investigation? The University's official position now courses, you will find references to blacks omitted. This, we feel, has a great deal to do with why we have so little understanding between the races today. Whites and blacks quite often see matters relating to race in practically opposite ways. In order to settle the urban crisis, we must understand each other's orientation. If we are all the same, why is it that 90 per cent of Wisconsin's blacks live in one area of Milwaukee?

Since Oct. 16, I have been committed to implementing these demands. A W-O-S-H Public Opinion caller stated, "Why do we need courses in black history; you can study that overnight." Perhaps what this gentleman has learned about blacks could be studied overnight, but black Americans have been in America since 1620, and their part in Watts in 1965 and the reasons for the riot could be a semester course by itself. In any case, we cannot blame this gentleman for the little that he knows about blacks, because we as educators have not attempted to teach him any more than slavery issues. If we take the position that WSU-O belongs to the City of Oshkosh, we then would recognize local public sentiment as being all-important. However, WSU-O is a State University, which now has over 11,000 students, and lest we forget, black people pay taxes too. If we want to graduate truly educated students, then we must expose them to all that makes America what it is today.

We otherwise face even more serious racial problems in the future.

Earlier I said I had been working to implement the black student demands. Mr. Layne and I were serving on an English Department committee for a course in black literature to be offered in January, 1969. I have been talking with department chairmen in hopes of getting the black experience properly introduced in courses in the following areas: economics, English, foreign languages, history, international studies, music, philosophy, political science, psychology, social science, sociology, social work, and faculty research. Letters have been sent to 30 black placement bureau directors at various colleges throughout the country in hopes of recruiting potential black faculty members. Individual letters have also been sent out.

Sub-committees of the Advisory Committee for the Culturally Distinct were close to securing a house for use as an Afro-American Cultural Center. The key idea of the center was that it was to be a place where blacks could expose parts of their culture which are not apparent in any other place in Oshkosh. It was to be a place for a dialogue between the races. More important, however, it was to be a place which would give the black students a place in which they could feel at home. Faculty members were to supervise the Center, but students were to provide the ideas.

is that no figures are available pending a report from the insurance company.

Regardless of what I've said up to now, there was destruction on Nov. 21 at Dempsey Hall and 90 students have been expelled. I have to point out, however, that it is obvious the Regents based their decision to expel these students on the destruction, although they were tried and found guilty only of unlawful assembly. Proof of this is the fact that the four students suspended until second semester were adjudged guilty of unlawful assembly and are therefore (if destruction were not considered) guilty of the same charge as the 90 expelled students.

The white students arrested at the same time and given the identical charges were not suspended. It appears as though they were presumed innocent while the blacks were assumed guilty. I can't help feeling the decision to expel these students was made on Nov. 22 with the notices of suspension. The events after this date seem to have been steps in carrying out expulsion rather than an attempt at trying to find out the facts. Mr. Kopp, Regents' spokesman, on Dec. 20 said no consideration was given to the Advisory Committee's recommendation which attempted to point out that there were alternatives besides readmission or expulsion.

What we have witnessed at WSU-O is a fear reaction resulting from the destructive demonstrations at Berkeley, Columbia, and San Francisco State. The latest published estimate of damage is $12,070 and I am confident the final estimates will be even lower. But by using this $12,070 estimate, the cost per pupil would be $120.70. The students will end up paying for more than this in court costs and expenses, plus a year of education lost. They have already lost $400 in tuition and living expense paid prior to Nov. 21. I have searched my soul and I honestly feel the regents over-reacted because of public pressure and the unfounded fear that Oshkosh would become another Berkeley.

I have one last point to make — no one was injured (a student twisted his ankle) because the students vented their very real frustrations on inanimate objects rather than people. The students seem to have kept human values in mind more than did the Board of Regents.

I selected the title "Blackness Doesn't Exist" because before Nov. 21, WSU-O administrators wanted to treat the black students as though they were the same as whites. In reality, however, every phase of their life in Oshkosh was affected by the fact that they were black. After Nov. 21, everything was dependent on the fact that they were black. White students who testified during the hearing that they were at times in the Dempsey Hall offices were not arrested. Now we are back to blackness doesn't exist at Oshkosh, only this time it literally doesn't exist. If nothing else is learned from this demonstration, we should admit to ourselves blackness does exist and that Wisconsin State University-Oshkosh should work to make itself relevant to all of its students, black and white.

Write to Your Lawmaker!

By John Wyngaard

Post-Crescent Staff Writer

MADISON—In the vaulted, sky-lighted chambers of the state capitol, the two houses of the Wisconsin legislature tomorrow will convene for their 79th regular session since the creation of the state of Wisconsin in 1848.

The 131 men and two women who will compose the new legislature during seven or eight succeeding months will receive up to 3,000 bills, and may enact up to 1,000 of them into law. Subjects to be covered will have a "cradle - to - the - grave" meaning to more than 4 million inhabitants of the state from whom they drew their law-making authority in the elections of 1966 and 1968. As the prefatory clause on each of the thousands of bills before them will put it:

"The people of the state of Wisconsin, represented in the senate and assembly, do enact as follows . . ."

Wisconsin traditions, the legislature's own rules of procedure and the characters of the electorate from which these legislative representatives sprang have made the Wisconsin legislature one of the more responsive and democratic in the literal sense of the word among the legislatures of the country, according to qualified students.

The parliamentary rules that have evolved over more than a century are carefully designed for the protection of minority viewpoints and extensive deliberation. Pending bills are widely distributed and publicized, at considerable expense to the state treasury. Hearings are announced in advance on all measures ready for committee consideration, and the rules for public appearances are liberal. Press coverage of legislative affairs is more extensive in Wisconsin than in most of the states of the country.

In spite of the growth of the national government in recent decades, the fundamental codes of laws in this country remain those contained in the statute books of the states, including the two fat volumes that contains the laws in effect here. Their jurisdiction extends from criminal law to family relations, from the laws governing property and contracts to the regulation of business and labor, from the provisions of a multitude of public services to taxation and the powers and responsibilities of creature local governments. Hundreds of other topics run the gamut of human affairs.

Yet the professional observer of Wisconsin legislative deliberations is often inclined to believe that there is less public participation in the deliberations and actions of the legislature than the constitutional fathers intended, or most legislators desire.

How can you involve yourself as a citizen in the actions of the new legislature that almost certainly will affect you in a score of ways, whether you are a big corporation executive or a recluse, the mother of a household or a wage earner, farmer or college student?

The answer is easy. It is contained in one word: Communicate.

The essence of the ideal of participatory democracy, with respect to the Wisconsin state legislature, is a reasonable awareness of the subjects under consideration by the legislature, and the expression of your own views to your representatives and others for their information and guidance.

There is an illusion that the legislature is daily deluged with sacks of mail, stacks of telegrams and hundreds of clamorous telephone calls.

It is untrue, with respect to communications from average individuals, expressing their own views, and acting upon their own initiative.

It would be idle and misleading to suggest that the legislature is not subjected to pressures from special interest groups, or "lobbies," in the parlance of statehouse politics. Sometimes, indeed, they generate substantial volumes of mail and other communications to serve their purposes. Up to 300 lobbyists will be registered for the new legislative session, for organizations large and small, and purposes significant and trivial. So intensively organized is modern society that the chances are strong that most of the readers of this dispatch are included in one or more of those "lobbies," often without realizing it. Professional societies, labor unions, business groups, farm producer organizations, taxpayer clubs, butchers, bakers and candle-stick makers and scores of others are represented on the legislative sidelines by alert, experienced agents.

Sometimes their interests are aggressive. But typically they are balanced by the presence of defensive lobbies. Often such representatives and their arguments are effective, and contrary to some habitual critics, not all of them are acting in opposition to the public interest.

Yet the important fact is that many of them succeed, whatever their purposes, because the typical Wisconsin legislature works in a vacuum with respect to communications from constituents. Expression of opinion from the rank and file citizens, or even the civic leaders of average communities of Wisconsin, are far less frequent than is often assumed.

On the basis of long observation of the Wisconsin legislative process, here are some suggestions for those persons who want to have a more direct hand in legislative issues that concern them, their families, their communities, and their state.

1. Remember that your own representative wants to hear from you.

2. Try to watch the general direction of legislative activity by a perusal of the news dispatches, and note the bills and resolutions in which you are especially interested.

3. Write succinctly, indicating that you have a reasonable knowledge of the subject and a genuine interest in its disposition. Use a typewriter if possible. Legislators, like others, find the careless handwriting of today a burden. When referring to a particular proposition, use the bill number, if possible.

4. Try to avoid a threatening posture. Your representative is likely to have communications containing viewpoints. It is his duty to represent his local constituency, and the state as a whole.

5. Write occasionally to express appreciation for what he has done, if it meets your approval, as well as to object, or criticize, or express disapproval.

6. Don't be discouraged if the news dispatches relate that a bill has been approved in one house. The purpose of the bi-cameral legislature is to assure more extensive deliberation. Many a measure has scooted through one chamber, only to be doomed in the other when its members realized it was unpopular. Moreover, remember that at any stage of a bill's progress a vote can be reconsidered, and a motion for reconsideration is a courtesy that most legislators are accustomed to grant to another.

7. If you are uncertain about the provisions of a bill you have heard or read about, write to your assemblyman or senator for a printed copy that will enable you to study its contents. He will be glad to oblige. Ask him also to send you copies of the hearing bulletins, if you think you may want to come to Madison to make public appearances before committees to express your views. Again, he will respond promptly.

8. If you have an urgent view and want to communicate quickly, use the telephone. Your representative may not always be immediately available, but he will return your call. More general telephone privileges for legislators have been in effect for several years. In general, however, it is probably more effective to write to him at Madison than to telephone at home during weekends, when he is probably busy with his personal and business affairs after his weekly sojourn in Madison.

If you are a member of an organized group that retains a lobbying agent at Madison, decline to join in the stereotyped letters and petitions that are so often employed by such lobbyists on behalf of their clientele. If you are convinced that the cause is a good one, your own individual thoughts on the matter, written by yourself, will have far more influence in Madison.

When you visit the capital city, on any day from Tuesday to Friday of the legislative week after full sessions begin in about February, call on your own representatives for a chat about their work, their problems, and their views on matters that interest you.

There is no better assurance of a responsive and responsible legislature than an attentive and interested constituency.

When the manager of The Post-Crescent Madison bureau takes his seat in the press gallery to cover the new state legislature, it will mark the convening of the 17th biennial session since he started his service as a Madison correspondent.

John Wyngaard is the dean of state capitol correspondents and his service as a statehouse reporter exceeds the tenure of all of the present Wisconsin legislators except Sen. Allan J. Busby of suburban Milwaukee county. Coincidentally, Busby once was the principal of the high school at Little Chute, where the reporter was born and reared.

'Soul Cities', U.S.A.

Associated Press Writer

In Mound Bayou, Miss., they know about Black Power. They've been at it for 81 years.

Mound Bayou is the oldest of the nation's all-Negro towns, and like the others it has its own elected government.

The black revolution raging across the country has had its impact on the all-Negro towns of America, of course. But for the most part it is muted to a distant murmur as the town leaders cope with the workaday problems that afflict every small town.

"We want our folks to know what it means to try to do the best they can for themselves," says Charles Kelley, an 89-year-old retired farmer who is the mayor of one such town, Mitchellville, Ark. "Self-government has meant much to the citizens of Mitchellville because they have learned what it means to go forward."

In Hobson City, Ala., the Rev. Nimrod Q. Reynolds, asserts: "I don't think the people have a separatist attitude, but there's a certain sense of pride in They're just like any other towns — except all the inhabitants are Negro. They haven't been caught up in the fever of the black revolution, but they have their problems — jobs, money, slums. Like any other town.

participation in something of their own. The main problem has been and still is a lack of communication. They simply don't know the strings to pull."

At this moment the biggest municipal crisis facing Mound Bayou is finding enough jobs for the town's 2,000 inhabitants. In another town, Howardville, Mo., the difficulty is much the same.

"We can't keep our young people," said Travis Howard, a retired teacher and school principal who founded Howardville about 15 years ago. "Several thousand kids graduated under me. You can't find more than a dozen now."

Situated on 100 acres in deep southeast Missouri, Howardville has a population of 190 and no industry. Howard claims the true population is closer to 750. "When the 1960 census taker came, most of our people were away working as migratory workers," he said.

In Hobson City you will find all the attributes of small town boosterism. Boasts Mayor J. R. Striplin: "I believe Hobson City is on the verge of a dramatic leap forward."

The townspeople recently ousted four oldtimers

Founded in 1887, Mound Bayou, Miss., is the oldest all-Negro town in the U. S. The biggest problem for Mayor Wesley Liddell, seen here with the town's border marker, is finding enough jobs for the 2,000 inhabitants. Lack of employment and opportunity (resulting in the poorest per capita income in the country) has caused many younger people to move away. (AP Newsfeatures Photo) from the town council and replaced them with young go-getters.

James Snow, director of the Housing Authority, admits, "What we're trying to do is get our fair share of the money available—just like any other town."

Just like any other town. The Negroes who live in these all-black towns for the most part have not been caught up in the racial revolution.

Mayor Kelley of Mitchellville says the local chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People is busy finding jobs and improving housing conditions for the 600 residents.

"It's very active in a civil way. We don't indulge in these marches and sit-ins," he said.

Other views are similar. "We don't want violence. We don't cater to that at all," said Howard, the father of baseball player Elston Howard. "But we do want to see the Negro get his share of jobs, education, things like that."

That doesn't mean that everything is fine in the all-Negro towns. Jobs are scarce, so is money, and most are little more than rural slums that have become a waystation for Negroes displaced by the mechanization of the plantations.

Julia Ann Boyd describes her hometown of Kinloch, Mo., this way: "I consider Kinloch a ghetto. Sure, we have some nice homes here, but not enough. Being a separate municipality, our problems are somewhat peculiar perhaps, but still they come from prejudice.

"In Kinloch you don't see prejudice against the individual, you see prejudice against the whole community. We are locked in by the white communities."

Kinloch, located northwest of St. Louis, is the largest of the all-Negro towns with a population of 8,000. It has its own police and fire departments and school system—and little else. There are no suburban shopping centers, no public parks or playgrounds. There is a supermarket and a furniture store, both white-owned, several government buildings, a few gin mills and cafes. The town has a few nice-to-luxurious homes, but most of them are rundown. The St. Louis County tax office figures about one-third of the residents live in low-cost public housing projects.

Mrs. Boyd, who is an official of the Kinloch Gateway Center, an Office of Economic Opportunity project, said she doesn't see the separatism doctrine of some black power advocates as a means to a better life for Negroes. But she acknowledges with a wry smile that it has had practical effect within Kinloch: "We have black leadership, so we don't have confrontations with the white power structure that sometimes leads to violence."

Leona B. Simmons is a Negro living in the all-Negro town of Idlewild, Mich. But she said, "I don't believe in any all-Negro anything."

Mrs. Simmons is Yates Township treasurer and owns the Lee-Jons Novelty and Soda Bar. Earlier this year she became the first Negro to be selected by the women's club in nearby Baldwin as "Lady of Hospitality of Lake County." Mrs. Simmons says she doesn't approve of the black supremacy movement, declaring, "I think people should be regarded on their merits."

Idlewild gained national prominence at its peak in the 1930s when thousands of Negroes vacationed at Lake Idlewild and listened to top-name Negro entertainers and bands. Now, the night spots are falling into disrepair and the cottages have been turned into year-around homes. The population is 400.

White people can buy land in Idlewild, says Harrison Wilson, who runs a land development firm, but none has inquired about it for some time.

Wilson has seen the town change from "a resort to a retirement area" and believes young people will move away "unless we can get some industry to attract them to stay."

In all of Lake County, only 71 firms were on the tax rolls in 1966. They employed 301 persons and had a taxable income of $213,000. Tourism has been the lure bringing money into Idlewild and other portions of the country. Fishermen and vacationers spent an estimated $45 million last year, officials said.

Despite the interest of Idlewilders in integration, many doubt that it will occur. The town's 105 children attend school with whites in Baldwin, but an attempt to found a Parent-Teacher Association failed. Said Bates, "There appeared to be a lack of interest on the part of the white families to organize an integrated PTA."

The 1,500 residents of Hobson City are struggling to become something more than an oddity in white-oriented Alabama. The town's nearest neighbor is Oxford, and the geographical proximity is no accident. Hobson City was incorporated in 1899 after Oxford whites refused to let the area, then known as "Moree Quarters," become part of the city.

For years, Hobson City sat proud, black and independent—as well as poor and stagnant. Within the past eight years, however, a garment plant employing about 200 persons located in the town and 20 low-rent housing units have been constructed with federal funds. In mid-September the town received word that the Housing and Urban Development Department had approved a $75,000 grant to build a community services building.

Hobson City officials have developed a feeling over the years that they are capable of running their own affairs and believe this is the way it should be. Nevertheless, they make no attempt to cut themselves off from the white power structure. They actively seek help, and that help is coming more and more with the relaxation of racial attitudes in Alabama.

"I think the people realize that the answer is not in separate black and white societies," said the Rev. Nimrod Reynolds. "There must be cooperation for the good of both. But the people of Hobson City are proud of what they've done and I think the sense of participation has been good."

What may be the most prosperous Negro town of all is Lawnsdale, N.J., where, through long struggle, black power has been translated into green power. The average income is $5,000 and 95 per cent of the residents own their own homes. In October, only one person was reported on welfare.

It took Lawnsdale nearly 100 years to achieve prosperity. Once the town was known mainly as a source of maids for white families, but now nearby plants of the Radio Corp. of America and the Campbell Soup Co. provide employment.

"We're really moving now," says Mayor Hilliard Moore. He boasts that during his eight-year administration the town has acquired a shopping center, sewage system, water station and road improvement program. A community swimming pool is planned and a garden apartment complex is under consideration.

Many of the townspeople are descendants of fugitive slaves who established the town as Free Haven. Later other Negroes moved in because they couldn't buy homes in white suburbs.

At present, four white families live in the town. One white resident, Rudolph Buchwald, said, "Those are real nice people—when you're down and out they'll all come out and help you."

One of the prime movers in the effort to attract industry to Mound Bayou is Herman Johnson, president of the Mound Bayou Investment Corp. and a "young Turk" alderman. Johnson, 38, slender, with darkly-tinted spectacles is influential among the town's young residents.

Johnson asserts that in Mound Bayou black power means "voter power, money power." To him the prescription for civil rights is simply and basically political.

"The way it should work is if black people have the majority vote then they should dominate in government," he said. "If they are not the majority, they ought to be represented—just as whites should be represented where black people are the majority. If it had been done this way all these years there wouldn't have been any of this trouble."

Still, the major problem facing Mound Bayou is jobs. Founded in 1887 by former slaves, it has never been long on opportunity. It is a rural town in country not far from the Mississippi River, and the shift from muscle to machine over the past 15 years has wiped out the farm and sharecropper work that used to sustain the surrounding area and, indirectly, the town.

The 1960 census figured the median annual income for a Negro family of five in rural Bolivar County was under $900. It may now be even less. On the basis of per capital income, it is the poorest in the nation.

Many younger men moved on, leaving behind only the very old and the very young.

"There wasn't nothing around here, nothing," said Mayor Wesley Liddell, 61, a paunchy 6-footer who runs a gasoline station. "The town really had its back to the wall. It was sliding downhill. Then some poverty work came in with a few jobs. Right now, if you wanted a man to do a day's labor you couldn't find one."

The antipoverty jobs he referred to, about 120 of them, hinge mainly on the operations of the Tufts-Delta Health Center. It is being set up under a $1,168,000 grant from the Office of Economic Opportunity. About a dozen whites are engaged in the medical project, giving Mound Bayou its first, albeit temporary, integration.

Police Sgt. Lawrence Johnson points out "The Strip" in Lawnside, N. J. — a row of clubs and eating places which attracts thousands of weekend visitors in summer. In this city, after a long struggle, black power has been translated into green power. The average income is $5,000 and 95 per cent of the residents own their own homes. In October, only one person was reported to be on welfare. (AP Newsfeatures Photo)

'Working Cats' Earned Keep During Strike

By Carole Warner

Almost everyone has heard of the Pied Piper, who, in days gone by, saved a city from the ravages of rats.

Today we have a modern Pied Piper who, although he doesn't play a pipe nor lure children away from homes, does an essential and important job in keeping the rat and mouse population in check.

He comes in a fuzzy suit, and is often maligned—the object of a hurled shoe, insults and worse. Yet, if it weren't for our furry friend, the cat, we would soon be in worse straits than were the people of the fabled German town.

Case in point: last February, the City of New York faced a serious increase in the rat population during the strike called by the city's garbage collectors. All the encouragement a rat or mouse needs to enlarge his family is an ample food supply—and here was a ready-made and growing banquet placed before him on the city's streets.

Except for the foresight of one man, Robert L. Kendell, president of the American Feline Society, and the cooperation of Friskies, Division of Carnation Company, New York's fear of being suddenly over-run with mice might have become a reality.

The Society has for a number of years operated a comprehensive night feeding program for New York's "working cats", as they are called. This program has aided considerably in controlling the rodent situation in the numerous test areas in which it was practiced.

Volunteer members of the Society have carried their baskets of milk, food and, at times, limited medication for patching torn ears and injured paws, to specific feeding stations, where the cats eagerly awaited their nightly rations.

The Society found out that a better-fed, healthy cat is a far better "ratter" than an undernourished, sickly one.

One of the nation's wealthier felines, Flat Nose, 20, of Chicago (pictured above), died Dec. 13, leaving William Fields, 79, sole heir to $15,000. The money was left by the cat's previous owner, Mrs. Margaret Montgomery, who died in 1960 after entrusting to Fields the care of Flat Nose and four other felines, all of whom preceded him in death. Although Fields was free to dip into the sum at any time to provide for his charges, he declined to do so, saying the cats were his "friends" (AP Wirephoto)

Normally, this had been a routine operation, but in this emergency where every cat would be called to do his utmost in rodent control, the Society welcomed with profound thanks the assistance of the pet-food folks.

Working with the volunteers of the Society, the manufacturing firm donated 500 cases of cat food to the AFS headquarters. The working cats of New York soon had full tummies, thus enabling each to dispatch a dozen or more rats a night.

So, the next time you hear a cat howling in the wee hours and are tempted to hurl a shoe as "ap-pause" . . . don't. Given encouragement, he may take it upon himself to dispatch that four-footed thief who has been raiding your pantry.

In 1959, Mrs. Margaret Montgomery, of Chicago, left $15,000 to her five cats. Her will stated that one Willie Fields, a former waiter and friend of Mrs. Montgomery, was entitled to the money if he survived the cats . . . and if he cared for them in the manner in which they had been accustomed while living in her apartment.

For the past nine years the cats dined on pot roast and other assorted delicacies while Willie saw to their health.

Although he found it hard to make ends meet during the years, Willie never touched a cent of the inheritance.

Then, one by one, as their nine lives ran out, the cats died. First Green Eyes, then Big Brother, then Kitty and Big Boy.

But the last cat, Flat Nose, lived on and on, attaining the ripe age of 20—long even for a cat.

But when Old Flat Nose died, he went out in style. He died on Friday, Dec. 13.

Was Willie happy? Hardly, for he had grown to love the cats, which were, as an acquaintance said, "about the best friends he had."

Sometimes a friend, even a fuzzy-furry one, is better than all the money in the world. At least Willie thinks so.

Switzerland Issues Publicity Stamps

By Syd Kronish

Switzerland has announced the issuance of its annual "Publicity Stamps" which each year honor different national events or anniversaries. The 1968 set consists of four stamps dedicated to four celebrations. The 10 centimes commemorates the 50th anniversary of the Swiss Accident Insurance Society. The main design is a miner's helmet. The 20 c marks the 125th anniversary of Switzerland's first three postage stamps issued in 1843. This design bears illustrations of the first three adhesives. The 25th anniversary of the Swiss National Commission for City Planning is commemorated on the 30 centimes values. The design shows a map. The 50 c honors the centenary of the Rhine Navigation Act. Six stars above an anchor represent the signatories—Switzerland, Belgium, West Germany, France, Great Britain and the Netherlands.

The Republic of Korea has issued a seven won stamp to commemorate the third general assembly of the Federation of Asian Pharmaceutical Associations held in Seoul. Fourteen countries and 1,700 delegates participated. The two main topics were "Natural Sources of Drugs in Asia" and "Problems of Food and Drug Additives." The new stamp bears the emblem of the association in a drab, dull design.

Here are some of the upcoming issues from Austria: a special stamp to mark the 50th anniversary of the death of Peter Rosegger, a new value in the Architectural Monuments series, a special stamp for the 1968 Winter Universiade at Innsbruck, a stamp to honor the bicentennial of Vienna Veterinary University and a series devoted to the International Air Mail Exhibition in Vienna.

Finest Fisherman

Post-Crescent Madison Bureau

MADISON — Among Wisconsin animals the most proficient fisherman is probably the elusive and sleek otter, as the managers of state trout hatcheries have long known, and as the state department of natural resources has corroborated in recent research.

Wildlife biologists examined the digestive tracts of otter taken by trappers in winter and early spring, and found that fish were the principal quarry of the species. But non-game fish were the most abundant. Game fish were said to occur infrequently, and crayfish, frogs and insects were important foods. The most frequently otter-caught fish include those that tend to be sluggish during the cold months.

World's Most Comprehensive Collection Of Americana Displayed at Ford Museum

By Lillian Mackesy

A soft winter snowfall blankets the village and its nearby museum, just outside Detroit. The weather doesn't stop the stream of visitors to this unique place—many prefer to come in the winter time to see what America looked like when it was young.

Greenfield Village, laid out on its 260-acre site, is America. The 14-acre Henry Ford Museum that's part of the development is wondrous in itself as part of this collection of Americana—from books to furniture to steam engines. It was 40 years ago that the indoor-outdoor museum of general history opened, yet it started much earlier when automobile maker Henry Ford began translating his abiding interest in American history into tangible examples of life in an earlier day.

This is how the huge Henry Ford Museum grew from collections stored for years in warehouses. Today it stands as one of the most comprehensive collection of Americana in the world. It has galleries of decorative arts, a street of early American shops, and a hall of mechanical arts.

Each of the exhibits is comprehensive in itself. The locomotive section displays trains from a replica of the first practical steam engine built in 1829 to the 600-ton Allegheny of the 1940s. The world's first three-color, four-way traffic light flashes its signals above the greatest collection of antique, classic and famous automobiles in existence. The Street of Early American Shops is a delightful five blocks of stores along the front of the Museum's Main Hall; the buildings not only are authentic in every detail on the outside, but so are they on the inside of the buildings.

The merchandise, the equipment and furnishings are so accurate it seems the proprietor has just stepped out for a moment. There's a violin shop with its workbench covered with curly maple shavings; individual shaving mugs line one wall of the barber shop; there's an East India shop where sailing vessels were outfitted, a millinery store, a drug store, and many others.

Greenfield Village centers around the typical green that's covered with grass in summer and snow laden now. Sleighs and cutters have replaced the carriages and at the moment all the buildings, homes and shops are trimmed with greens for the holidays. The colonnaded, century-old Clinton Inn (where meals are served) skirts the green along with Town Hall, the Scotch Settlement School and Martha-Mary Chapel. On the outskirts of the Village is an industrial area with its fascinating "working" saw mills, cider mill, sugar and grist mills as well as several other workshops and factories.

About 100 historic buildings fan out from the green where Clinton Inn stands in Greenfield Village. Here, the Inn is decorated for the holiday season and many winter tourists dine in its well-kept rooms just as Americans did a century and more ago. The green which fronts the Inn and other buildings on the grassy square was the community center in the olden days.

When Greenfield Village came into official being in 1929, it had 28 buildings. Today it has grown to 100 shops, stores and houses in a community setting. Many of the buildings are important historical landmarks. One is the Wright Cycle Shop, in which Wilbur and Orville Wright built the airplane parts for their Kitty Hawk flight. It was brought to Greenfield from its original Ohio site in Dayton and, with the Wright brothers' homestead, was carefully rebuilt under the supervision of Orville Wright himself.

Other buildings brought to the Village also have a historical story to tell. There's the Webster House, where Noah Webster worked on his dictionary. There's the birthplace of great naturalist Luther Burbank, Ann Arbor House in which poet Robert Frost lived while attending the University of Michigan. The Logan County Courthouse, in which Abraham Lincoln once practiced law, houses the chair in which he was sitting the night of his assassination at Ford's Theater. One of the important historical places in the Village is Thomas Edison's Menlo Park, compound brought from its original New Jersey home and recreated here.

A windmill from Cape Cod, a covered bridge from Pennsylvania, an oldtime New Hampshire fire house complete with a 19th century fire engine are located on Village property to illustrate a milestone in the country's development or a period of history. There even is a limestone cottage with its characteristic out-buildings, transported from England and dating from 1820, to show how the early colonists lived before

It's a fascinating place of history with candlemaking, spinning, pottery making, silver-smithing going on. The cooper turns out his kegs and firkins while the pewterer fashions his mugs and pitchers. These modern craftsmen and women are all experts, plying their trades with skill and in the old-fashioned way.

The program is year-around with January and February featuring famous early movies, a special exhibit on printing, a sports car show, a series of lectures on Museum antiques and an Edison Science Youth Day. There's something for everyone at Greenfield Village and the Museum.

Henry Ford spoke truly when he said: "When we are through we shall have reproduced American life and preserved in actual working form at least a part of our history and our tradition."

The Duncan Phyfe Alcove is one of the many fine examples of American furniture craftsmanship which may be seen in the Henry Ford Museum. There are dozens of galleries and alcoves that hold decorative arts dating from the 1600s to the early years of the present century.

Bishop Pike Meticulously Documents 'Communication' With Departed Son

By Miles A. Smith

The Other Side. By James A. Pike, with Dianne Kennedy. Doubleday. $5.95.

The controversial Bishop Pike's early 1967 book "If This Be Heresy" contained one chapter on the possibilities of communicating with the dead, without giving any hint of a personal involvement. Then late last year it became known, through a television program, that the bishop had attended a number of seances in which there purportedly was communication with his dead son Jim.

This book is a detailed and analytical report on that situation.

It begins with a candid recital of how the bishop tried to help Jim break away from psychedelic drugs — unsuccessfully, as Jim killed himself while drugged.

The author tells how a series of poltergeist incidents pointed to the idea that Jim was trying to get his father's attention; how the bishop first went to a medium in England, and later to others in the United States and Canada. He records at length the messages that were exchanged (some of them recorded on tape) that seemed to reveal information no one else would have.

Nowhere in the book does Pike declare that he "knows" he has communicated with his son, but he says he "believes" it, making the point that it is a matter of faith.

Carefully maintaining a legalistic, evidential tone, (he was trained as a lawyer as well as a cleric), Pike discusses the types of psychic phenomena, and considers the possibilities that fraud or deception might have entered into his experiences. He always qualifies his statements. For example, he says "I was well aware from the very beginning that if there was any genuine communication going on here, it was communication with finite beings."

Many readers, as Pike is well aware, shy away from believing accounts of psychic phenomena. So he has been meticulous about presenting his account in a cool manner, without making any claims. His only plea is that everyone maintain an open mind about paranormal events. Even very skeptical readers are likely to find his report worth reading.

Mrs. Parkinson's Law. By C. Northcote Parkinson. Houghton Mifflin. $4.95.

Parkinson now turns his attention to the domestic scene. His wit is of the type described by the word astringent, but it also carries with it some human insights that illuminate.

Parkinson is commenting on the hazards of the marital state, under such themes as romance, marriage, child raising, social contacts, status and escape mechanisms.

He has a very funny chapter on the inept arrangements of the usual home—badly planned and stuffed with supposedly mandatory appliances. The chapter "Hosts and Guests" contains a detailed analysis of how to manage a cocktail party, and it is a devastatingly humorous classic full of bright observations of human nature.

There are two chapters that parents shouldn't be without. One on "The children" reminds us that not too many decades ago parents of even moderate means were able to hire servants to raise the little monsters, with a minimum of parental contact—and the sky didn't fall in. The other, "Teenology," is a nicely nasty examination of the contrast between the old days, when children were sent out to work at a tender age, and the present-day practice of coddling the kids into their 20s.

Parkinson is no sociologist, but he has given the sociologists a pointer by noting that the so-called emancipation of women has destroyed the parents' authority over their children.

Let's say that Parkinson is in fine form as an entertaining wit, but more than that, as a critic of modern customs, follies, errors and miscalculations.

Both Sexes Should Know. By Bette Knight. Scripps. Avon. 60 Cents.

For those who want to step on a magic carpet and escape from their workaday world, this pleasantly unpretentious paperback is just the thing. Bette Knight Scripps, who is married to E. W. Scripps of the newspaper family, combines motherhood, a newspaper column and an international social life. This book opens the door to her own glamorous world of travel, high fashion and celebrities.

This isn't a travel book, although the columns from which it is compiled bear datelines from St. Tropez to Lima. There are vivid descriptions of odd customs and strange places but the range is broader. Anecdotes of celebrity friends provide informal glimpses of royalty and film stars.

Her running commentary on fashion, done with wit and authority, is the high spot for women readers. Mrs. Scripps' commentary ranges from famous designer friends such as Capt. Edward Molyneux and Pierre Cardin to simple but intriguing fashion and beauty axioms.

For a girl like this reviewer who must enjoy the jet set vicariously, "Both Sexes Should Know" is fast, fun reading.

Under the Boardwalk. By Norman Rosten. Prentice-Hall. $4.95.

Perhaps it is because Rosten is a poet and playwright that he has an especially sensitive approach to the age-old theme of the boy growing up.

This is a story narrated by a boy who began to grow up years ago along the edge of the boardwalk at the old-time New York playground called Coney Island—a place of hot dogs, ferris wheels, crowded beaches, furtive love-making, pop stands, flighty characters and little privacy.

He lived in a wacky household. The boy's emotional, outgoing and improvident mother and his taciturn father ran a combination rooming house and bathing lockerroom, and they fought each other valiantly with wild arguments.

The boy touches the fragile edge of adult understanding as he experiences comic and tragic episodes through a whole summer of life along the boardwalk.

This novel is like a series of short vignettes of life, and it is written with a delicate touch.

Song of the Sirens. By Ernest K. Gann. Simon & Schuster. $5.95.

This chronicle of a writing man's seafaring life is centered upon Gann's adventures in the Albatros, a 92-ton schooner which he discovered at a Rotterdam dock and described as "a middle-aged maid of fading beauty and questionable virtue."

She was his 16th vessel since his boyhood days, counting all sizes and shapes (one was little more than a raft). But he fell in love with the Albatros at once.

With a pick-up crew he sailed her to San Francisco, not without some trouble with an auxiliary engine that balked most of the time. The trip took 118 days.

There the schooner was converted into a brigantine, and with another pickup crew Gann sailed her to the South Seas and back to Honolulu. On one occasion the ship was caught in a storm with too much sail, resulting in a desperate fight.

By means of flashbacks, Gann tells of his experiences with other craft; describes an interval during which he tried in vain to be a commercial fisherman on the West Coast, and relates an incident with a piratical old skipper who had a salvage scheme.

Landlubbers need not be stumped by the many nautical terms contained in his book. They don't get in the way of a flowing narrative, and can easily be skipped over.

Best known for his work on flying, "Fate Is the Hunter," Gann is revealed here as a man with saltwater in his veins. He writes beautifully of the sea and his book is a pleasure to read.

The Seance. By Isaac Bashevis Singer. Farrar, Straus & Giroux, Inc. $5.95.

Reading a Singer story is similar to watching an artisan build a wall: each word, like each brick, is there for a specific purpose.

There are no wild, rambling flights of purple prose with all the substance of cotton candy in any of these 16 stories. Each word follows in logical progression and when the words stop something important has been said. A deceptively simple style—the style of a master writer.

"The Slaughterer," for example, begins: "Yoineh Meir should have become the Kolomir rabbi." Singer uses this simple statement to spring into an absorbing account of why Meir didn't become the rabbi, but the town slaughterer instead—a job that eventually drives Meir to madness and suicide. Bit by bit Singer builds his fascinating account to its predestined end, and when that point is reached the reader has passed through a profound experience that leaves him emotionally drained.

"Each of these stories, which originally appeared in a variety of magazines ranging from Playboy to Harper's, opens with a low-key simple statement that forces the reader to think and then, of course, read on.

"The Lecture" begins: "I was on my way to Montreal to deliver a lecture." Who, the reader asks, is I; why Montreal; what kind of a lecture?

Singer answers all questions but not immediately. He's too good a storyteller for that. Those who really want to know have to go all the way to get their answers. The trip is worth it.

Focusing on Groundglass Helps Make Fine Portraits of Animals

By Irving Desfor

Walter Chandoha, one of America's foremost animal photographers, brings baby animals within reach of pet-loving children—through photography, naturally.

He conceived a series of picture books designed and written for youngsters, each of which tells a simple picture story of a baby animal, starting shortly after birth. Each one is followed through its early adventures of eating, playing and getting acquainted with the world and some fellow creatures.

The success of the first set—"A Kitten For You," "A Puppy For You" and "A Foal For You"—established the formula, followed by a baby bunny, baby goat and baby goose. The books are distributed by The World Publishing Co. of Cleveland and New York ($1.95). Since there are other endearing babies in the animal kingdom, there are likely to be other baby animal books for children by Walter Chandoha.

Chandoha has some advice for amateur photographers who wish to make interesting photos of their own pets or zoo animals based on his 17-year career of photographing animals, taking more than 50,000 successful pictures in the process.

He favors a reflex camera so you can see and compose your picture on the groundglass as it will appear in finished form. He likes to shoot outdoors and makes use of sidelight and backlight for more dramatic effect. Indoors, when natural illumination is inadequate, he relies on flash, especially with color. And he stresses three points he considers important for good animal pictures:

1. Infinite patience. You must watch, wait and be ready to capture something picture worthy because a normal photo of an animal is not of general interest—except, possibly, to a pet owner. A photographer must be prepared to stand around for hours, eyes to view finder, and stay alert for something to happen; a yawn, a leap, a laugh, a scratch, a snarl—any motion that adds expressive action to a photo.

2. A quick "trigger" finger. All the waiting for an animal to do something will be wasted if the photographer's reflexes are slow. "I keep my reflexes on target by constant practice without a camera when watching TV or a motion picture, when driving a car or when I'm walking," says Chandoha.

3. A fast shutter speed. Obviously, a fast shutter speed stops subject action. It also counteracts camera movement, a major factor causing unsharp pictures.

A horse laugh? It's a first attempt anyway, by a baby horse — enough to make a more exciting photo for Walter Chandoha. It appears in "A Foal For You," one of a series of baby animal books by the noted animal photographer from Annandale, N. J.

Thirdly, a fast shutter speed makes you open your lens wider; this leaves the focus on the subject and the background less sharp—a technique which usually improves the impact of an animal photo.

There's never enough working space in a darkroom, so when a simple, sensible idea for conserving space comes along, one wonders why it took so long in coming.

This is the reaction on seeing the "Tray-Rak" space saver made by Richard Manufacturing Co., Van Nuys, Calif.

The Tray-Rak holds three trays in a vertical, stair-step arrangement which occupies the counter space of only the bottom tray. In use, processing starts with the top tray, proceeds to the middle tray and ends with the bottom one. Each tray can be pulled partially out, like a drawer, when needed and pushed back when its phase of operation is through.

Amateurs will find this a practical arrangement for print processing with the developer, stop bath and fixer in logical order, top to bottom. To prevent any undue carryover of solutions, a print is pulled straight up letting it drain into its tray before putting it into the lower, pulled-out tray. The device is adjustable for either 11 x 4 or 8 x 10 trays.

For professional photographers, there is a larger model which accommodates trays from 11 x 4 up to 20 x 24 inches. The triple-decker setup provides for working with divided developers, double fixers and other advanced techniques.

The Tray-Pak's wire frame construction is of welded steel coated with noncorrosive white vinyl. It folds flat when not in use. It is available as a separate unit or can be purchased with trays at special combination prices. National distribution to camera store dealers begins in mid-August. For more information, write: P.O. Box 2041, Van Nuys, Calif. 91404.

Great Variety Of Birdlife Present This Winter

By Clara Hussong

This is one of those years when a great variety of birdlife is present. The common winter species, which we can count on every year, appear to be more abundant than ever. The less common ones, often scarce or almost absent some winters, are being reported from every part of the state.

Those who feed winter birds had been reporting in recent winters that very few chickadees came to the feeders. This year every one seems to have them. Those who never had cardinals at their feeders before are being favored by visits from these big red birds.

People who had never seen shrikes before are seeing this gray, white and black bird with its hawk-like bill and hawklike feeding habits. The northern shrike is our winter species, and the loggerhead or migrant shrike is our summer species. They look much alike except that the northern species is a little larger and paler gray. About the size of robins, they have big heads, plump bodies, black wings and long, slim, black tails. Look for them in farm yards, fields and along the edges of woods.

The shrike is often called the "butcher bird," because of its feeding habits. It perches on tree branches, high wires or poles and watches for its animal food below, just as hawks do. When it sees something moving, it swoops down and grabs up its prey—mouse, insect or small bird—which it then impales on a wire fence barb or thorn of a tree. With its hawklike bill it tears its victim apart and proceeds to feed.

Evening grosbeaks are nothing new to people who have been feeding birds for years. They come down from Canada every few winters. They haven't been very common recently, but this year they seem to have invaded every part of the state. The pine grosbeak, a reddish cousin of the evening species, is leaving its usual woodland winter haunts and is coming to town, according to many reports.

Others of the finch family, to which grosbeaks belong, have been seen in various parts of the state. Included are pine siskins, redpolls, purple finches and crossbills. Watch for them at your feeders and also in weedy places in the country. The more familiar juncos and tree sparrows, members of the same family, also feed on seeds at feeders and in the wild.

Snow buntings have been around here since the middle of October. In flight they are largely white. Look for darker birds in the flocks. They may be Lapland longspurs which swoop and swirl gracefully just as the snow bunting does. These buntings were once called "snowflakes" because of their white coloring and their dancing flight.

A Green Bay resident of the western edge of town described a bird she saw in her yard. It could, she said, be nothing else but the female varied thrush, a native of western mountains. It has been seen winters in several other cities of Wisconsin in recent years. It resembles a faded robin, with a gray band across its upper chest. The breast color of the female is more golden than the male's rusty red. Watch your feeders for this rarity, and let me know if you see one.

Obtaining Catalog Is First Step In Purchasing Plants by Mail

By Katherine B. Walker

Our Source Sheet, which is distributed without charge to readers who send a self-addressed, stamped envelope with their request for a copy, lists only a very few of the many firms throughout the country who do a mail-order business in house plants. On the whole, these firms do a commendable job of handling orders promptly, packing the plants carefully, and making as certain as they can that the customer will be satisfied. In any business, mistakes are bound to occur; often a note from the customer is enough to get them corrected. But, before you blame any mail-order concern for what seems an error on its part, make sure that you yourself have done all you can to simplify the processing of your order.

First, obtain a catalog. This sometimes involves a small charge. Be sure to enclose the correct amount asked for, and slip the coins into an enclosure envelope with your name and full address printed on it. Your letter (or note) asking for a catalog should also be typed or printed. While you may think your handwriting is fully legible, it may look like so many hen-tracks to a stranger! Never give "City" as part of your return address; if your letter becomes separated from its envelope, or the postmark is blurry, who knows which "City" it may be? Or even what state, for that matter. Do give your city, state and Zip code number on your letter as well as on the envelope.

When your catalog arrives, read it thoughtfully. There may be a minimum-order requirement, sales taxes may be requested, discounts may apply on quantity purchases, charges may be made for handling and shipping, and so on. Don't begin making out your order until you understand the instructions (which usually vary with the firm).

Type, or print your order. When it is acknowledged, it will have a number, to which you should always refer if you need to write again. Never add "foot-notes" to your order; these may, however, be enclosed with it on a separate sheet of paper bearing your name, full address and the date. If you will follow these suggestions whenever you deal with any type of mail-order firm, you will help speed delivery of your order, and reduce the chances of mistakes being made in filling it. A lot of thought goes into the layout of a catalog, to make ordering as easy as possible for the customer. If you follow the instructions, you'll make things easier for the mail-order firm, and they'll love you for it!

Questions and Answers

Q. Recently I received a Zebra Plant. It has a stem an inch thick, green leaves with white crosswise stripes, and bloom was yellow along a four-edged cone. All the florist here knows about it is that it should be kept wet. Can you tell me more?

A. I believe you have a variety of Aphelandra squarrosa. Give the plant a warm place with strong light but no direct sun, and keep the soil quite moist.

Q. I have a lovely fern that has suddenly become almost covered with brown scale insects. These are bugs, not fern spores, and are thick on the stems as well as on the fronds. I know you recommend lifting each one off with a knife-blade tip, but believe me, that would be an impossible job. Isn't there anything I can do, or must I just watch my poor plant being sapped of all its life by these pests?

A. Available at most garden shops are systemic poisons which will help kill scale although the labels seldom mention these by name. Use the material in strict accordance with the manufacturer's instructions; read these before you purchase the product, and you may decide not to risk it, after all! Wear heavy gloves and long sleeves while using the poison, to protect your skin from exposure to it. After using, put clothes and gloves in the washing machine for at least two full runs. Wear a surgical face mask, to avoid inhaling dust or fumes; dispose of this after use. All of these precautions may not be necessary, but when handling any poisons you should take every safety measure you can think of. One more word: if you have children or pets who might get close to a treated plant, isolate the plant from them in a closed-off but well-ventilated room for a few weeks.

Mrs. Walker is always happy to read from readers, and whenever possible she answers their questions on house plant in her column, but she regrets that because of the vast volume of mail received she cannot reply to individual letters.

"ASTRO-GUIDE" By Ceean

Sunday, January 5

Present—For You and Yours . . . Minor negative rays suggest that appealing to reasonableness of an unreasonable person will be just a waste of time. Handle personal situation with alacrity, without giving the person time to argue. Include church in today's plans as you will need the inspiration you gain there.

The Day Under Your Sign

Aries. Born Mar. 21 to Apr. 19
The creative urge in the Aries-born is sparked. Start an interesting project.

Taurus. April 20 to May 20
Watch out for misstep or there will be serious consequences.

Gemini. May 21 to June 21
You must bow down to the inevitable more than usual. Remain good natured.

Cancer. June 22 to July 21

Leo. July 22 to Aug. 21

Virgo. Aug. 22 to Sept. 22
A natural desire to delay irksome jobs for more interesting one exists.

Libra. Sept. 23 to Oct. 22
Curious friends ask questions but you are not obliged to answer their queries.

Scorpio. Oct. 23 to Nov. 21

Sagittarius. Nov. 22 to Dec. 21

Capricorn. Dec. 22 to Jan. 20

Aquarius. Jan. 21 to Feb. 19
Both old problems and new demand attention today. You'll be able to cope with both.

Pisces. Feb. 20 to March 20

Public Library

Holds Key to

Gardening Skills

By Uncle Jack

Now and again the editors are kind enough to relay to me the occasional letters and post-cards addressed to this corner by interested people. Most of them ask questions. One recent correspondent asked me to nominate the most important thing I have learned about gardening.

Probably the answer must be in two parts, for the amateur or first-time gardener, and for the more experienced.

For the amateur, the best advice I can give is to ask the public library for the loan of one or several elementary books on horticulture or the home grounds and to read them during these long winter evenings in preparation for the back-yard season beginning next spring. Then, learn the art in your own way, through trial and error, which is typically the origin of the gardening knowledge and skill of those neighbors whose lawns, flower and vegetable gardens, hedges and borders you have admired.

For the experienced gardener, I would suggest the development of a specialty. All good gardeners are generalists, as they would say in pedagogical circles.

But there is a peculiar pleasure in developing genuine skill with certain favorite plants, peonies, day lilies, iris, gladiolus, dahlia, roses or whatever, as a slow drive around your own town and a few calls upon neighborhood gardeners will quickly persuade you.

For the gardener who has had some experience, but who is not thoroughly sophisticated, there are a number of important rules to remember:

Don't plant more than you are certain can be cared for without excessive labor or diversion of time from other seasonal pleasure.

Care for your tools, especially the cutting tools. There is nothing more frustrating than a dull pruner, or hoe, or mower blade, or a leaking hose.

Prepare a garden plan, and hold to it.

Schedule one important grounds or garden improvement project each year. More than that and gardening becomes hard work, rather than recreation.

Weed and cultivate carefully in the early part of the season. Many a garden has been given up as lost because the first weeding was delayed by a fortnight.

Buy seed, plants, shrub and tree-planting stock at home whenever possible. Ignore those siren allurements in the colored catalogues of the mail order merchandisers. Too often they are intended to entice the gullible. If there is an annual or a perennial, a tree or a shrub, that is adapted to the soil and climate of your locality, you will be able to find a local dealer who stocks it.

Both Dad, Tree Trimmed During Holidays

By Roger W. Dana

The holiday season is the time of year when both the Christmas tree and Dad get trimmed. Sometimes they both get lit up, too.

I had a rough Christmas this year. All year long I deposited money in my bank's Christmas club — and what happened on Christmas eve? Santa Claus went down the bank's chimney instead of mine. We had our usual Christmas this year. Santa Claus didn't come down our chimney, but the man from the finance company did. Regardless of the weather, we always have a "White" Christmas at my house. I turn white as a sheet when the bills start coming in. When I hear someone on my roof or pounding on my door Christmas eve, my thoughts turn to this:

*I hear him pounding on my door,
It makes me pause, conjecture—
Is this really Santa Claus,
Or one more bill collector?*

The department stores really had the Christmas spirit this year, and business was wonderful. I saw a sign in a local store which read, "Do your Christmas shoplifting early this year." Another store had a female Santa; she sat on your knee.

All this Christmas spending is crazy anyway. Giving Christmas gifts or presents creates some funny situations. Wives give their husbands sport shirts, leisure slacks and loafer shoes and then call the poor guys lazy when they act the part they're dressed for.

To make matters worse with Christmas gifts a wife will buy her husband a set of golf clubs, then complain that he is never home. A guy who has just joined AA will get a bottle of booze for Christmas. The mailman gets a new pair of hiking boots. A girl who gets a $1.00 pair of earrings has to spend $18 to have her ears pierced. And it's pretty certain that the waterproof, shockproof, antimagnetic watch you so carefully selected for junior will be broken by the time the New Year rolls around.

I send all my friends practical gifts like books. I buy the books in October and November so I can read them before mailing them for Christmas.

I received a very nice gift from my bank. They gave me a calendar for Christmas to remind me when my payments are due.

Well, anyway, Christmas is over for another year but we still won't be able to sit back and take it easy. Here's why:

*The Christmas spending's over,
But we just can't relax —
Instead of being in clover,
Next it's the income tax.*

One thing that was very nice about the Christmas season was that the Christmas carols got the rock and roll music off the radio for a short spell anyway. I'm looking forward to next Christmas. I figure I'll have this Christmas paid for by then.

'King of the Hill'—Another Name for Mayhem

Football can be rough, and soccer isn't exactly a parlor sport, but the closest thing to mass mayhem that I have ever participated in was a favorable grade school game called "King of the Hill." All that was needed to touch off one of these action-packed free-for-alls for miniature citizens was the spotting by one of the gang of a pile of snow, a mound of earth or a hill.

Some stout-hearted youngster would gain the summit of the spur of the moment battlefield, shout "I'm King of the Hill," and seconds later disappear beneath the struggling bodies of an aroused peasantry, ali with royal ambitions of their own.

The idea of the game was to defend your hilltop bastion against the surging assaults of challengers of all sizes. This constituted something of a war strategist's nightmare, for in warding off a furious frontal attack, one might find himself being forcibly withdrawn from the fray by a devastating drag from the rear. To defend against simultaneous attack from all sides at once required the fast reactions, agility and strength of a Samson.

Fist fighting and kicking were banned, but pushing, pulling, tackling and butting with the head were all perfectly acceptable combat techniques. It was apparent that manufacturers of boy's clothing just didn't have "King of the Hill" games in mind, for the majority of items of apparel worn by participants came through the melee in sadly deteriorated condition. At least, a garment which had experienced this tortuous field trial was definitely never able to achieve that crisp look of brand newness again.

At first my mother appeared more saddened than angry when she viewed the torn sleeves, ripped seams and kneeless pants resulting from our strenuous encounters.

"If you boys like patched clothes, that's what you are going to have," she said. "You won't get another new thing until you learn to take care of what you have."

A woman of action, she soon turned to stronger measures to emphasize her viewpoint that participation in these knock 'em down, drag 'em out battles was just not being done that season.

My brother and I, who found the thrill of combat impossible to resist, always faced another kind of workout when we arrived home from the wars. Mom would sigh and get her laundry stirring stick, which she also used for creating a stir among the young boys of the family when the need arose. On days when we had known the fury of two such wild actions, nightfall found us feeling quite chastened, both mentally and physically.

The call to arms was not often sounded during the long vacation season, but in mid-afternoon of one particularly hot and sticky summer day a group of neighbor boys voiced the irresistible "King of the Hill" shout. There, about a block away, behind the boiler room of the public high school, as if by magic, had appeared a great pile of black dirt. At least seven feet high, the jet-black mound beckoned in the shimmering sunlight with all the appeal of a dark Pied Piper of Hamelin.

Joyous urchins converged on the loamy-looking hill from all directions — riding bikes, dragging coaster wagons or running on feet. The glad, bright faces darkened with dismay as the first children to reach the ebony cone tried to run to the top, but instead disappeared smokily into the depths within. A great black cloud arose as they exploded, choking, coughing and completely unrecognizable, from the other side.

"It isn't dirt. It's soot," someone yelled excitedly.

Hoots of laughter went up as the still clean youngsters noted the chimney-sweep appearance of the members of the advance guard. Throwing caution to the winds, a blond boy from down the block sped full-speed through the powdery hill on his bicycle.

Only Fair

LOUISVILLE (AP) — The Rev. James Flynn, assistant pastor of Mother of Good Counsel Catholic Church, was teaching his flock a new hymn but the vocal response wasn't too good.

"Come on, you men," he urged. "So God gave you a lousy voice—let's let Him hear it."

Plumes of soot shot out in all directions as he emerged, blond no longer.

Following suit, two boys pulling another in a coaster wagon galloped through the spreading, waist-deep material. Soot followed them in a smoky trail as they careened crazily around for another turn. By now everyone was taking part in the wild action, as the battered soot pile became lower and wider.

Heroine of the entire affair was the neighborhood tomboy, a dimpled redhead with green eyes. Arriving late and deceptively angelic in a fresh blue and white dress, her imagination topped us all as she sailed in headfirst with a beautiful running dive. Like a pigtailed surfboard, she skimmed the surface for a moment, then sank from view. The unforgettable picture of that flying figure plowing into those murky depths is still one of my most treasured memories.

The fun was short-lived as a bevy of distracted-looking neighborhood mothers descended on the scene to apprehend their dusky charges. Vowing to sue the workmen who had dumped the soot from the school's smokestack in such an accessible place, they hurried their children away. Cries of dismay ringing in our ears, those of us who were yet unclaimed started reluctantly for home.

"Wait until I get you cleaned up," threatened our mother as she forced us to undress on newspapers out on our screened side porch. "I'm really gong to whip you two boys then."

One of us took the punishment, the other didn't. When our features began to become more distinguishable through the use of string soap and a scrub brush, Mom discovered that my companion in the bathtub was not my brother at all, but the boy who lived next door. A hurried call to the neighboring housewife resulted in the location of my brother, who had been undergoing a rather strenuous cleaning job at her hands in a large galvanized tub in her basement.

The humor of the moment lightened things for a while, but the consequences of our actions resulted in some painful memories for my brother and me. As a matter of fact, we were both so impressed with the logic of my mother's approach to the situation that we never played "King of the Hill" again.

Kubrick's '2001' Wins Jingo's Nod as Superb Epic of Space Flight

BY JINGO

The city fathers can relax. Far from being the home of so-called "art" films of a shabby or shady nature, the elegant new Cinema I on Appleton's Wisconsin Avenue has opened its doors to public patronage with a motion picture of real artistic merit — Stanley Kubrick's two-hour, 19-

Jingo — considerably more exciting (and safer, to boot) than a "trip" of the LSD variety.

Director-producer Kubrick and his collaborator, science-fiction writer Arthur Clarke, have happily avoided the usual clichéd plot-lines about space villains, international through the intervention of an immensely more sophisticated race of alien beings. This intervention takes the form of the appearance of a monolith, which signals a major change in Man's attitudes, capabilities and physical appearance.

Thousands of generations ago, the authors tell us, a mysterious monolith somehow inspired Man's transformation from a frightened, pastoral being into an aggressive, weapon-using, proto-human creature. The moment of this change — when a club floating in the air, dissolves into a spacecraft lazily seeking a space station in the year 2001 — is the finest in the film.

Later, a similar monolith is discovered on the moon — planted there some 4,000,000 years ago, to be discovered when Man reached this point in his technological development. Just as the first monolith caused the bearer of humanity's seed to pick up a bone and strike his rival with it, so the second monolith sends him on a space voyage to Jupiter.

It is this voyage, with co-stars Keir Dullea and Gary Lockwood at the controls, that constitutes the principal episode of the film. It is a brilliantly-realized sequence in which two astronauts find themselves pitted against an all-too-human computer named "Hal". The film's final moments, in which the surviving astronaut witnesses his own physical death and then is transfigured into an enormous embryo floating over his native earth, are superbly conceived and executed.

Kubrick's brilliant effects are impressively registered on the 32-foot panoramic screen of Cinema I, one of the new "generation" of smaller motion-picture theaters, designed for maximum effectiveness of picture and sound. Jingo doubts that there's a bad seat in the house.

Following the run of "2001: A Space Odyssey," the management of Cinema I expects to book another road-show attraction of the caliber of "Star," "Oliver" or "Hello Dolly."

minute masterwork, "2001: A Space Odyssey," in Cinerama. Here, Jingo is happy to report, is a successful production with none of the "sex-and-violence" trappings about which moralists have become (in some instances, justifiably) alarmed. Instead, it is a visually stunning and intellectually stimulating exercise in informed scientific speculation.

It is also — thanks to some special-effects work which impressed and baffled even the usually knowledgeable rivalries and the inevitable climactic explosions (with screaming starlets dashing onto the last scheduled starship before the entire complex blows up). Instead, they have created an essential simple, but brilliantly plausible parable about the next great step to be taken in the development of Mankind.

Humanity, Kubrick and Clarke seem to be saying, is periodically lifted from one level of psychic and intellectual attainment to another

Dassin Back After 20 Years

BY NORMAN GOLDSTEIN

Cover Story

NEW YORK (AP) — It took 20 years for Jules Dassin to come back to his native United States to make a film—and he chose the hot potato of the current Negro unrest to do it.

Dassin left the states during the McCarthy era, when his name was raised in the general Communist name-calling.

"Phaedra," "10:30 P.M. Summer," the latter a "monumental failure," by his own admission.

Now Dassin was back and anxious to talk of his new film, "Up Tight." In black turtleneck sweater and sports jacket, pacing the floor intermittently to collect his thoughts before answering a question, he spoke with relaxed reflection.

LOOKED FIT

His curly white hair and bright blue eyes made him appear younger than his 56 years, and despite an oncoming cold he looked fitter than ever. He joked about a recent TV talk show he was on, in which they spent most of the time talking about the vivacious Melina and not the new film. And he shrugged off the "bad" years with an air of a man who had made the best of wherever he was—and had a good time doing it. Having Melina there for some 10 years of it helped, of course.

What brought him back? Only a slight pause, then: "This film brought me back."

"I became employable about five years ago," he said with just a trace of a grin, but with no hint of bitterness. "But I waited to do a film on this theme. I always wanted to come back here to live."

It was, of course, a good deal more than just the film that brought him back. Hollywood had changed; he felt there was more freedom there now. And, more importantly, "this Greek thing came up."

CAME BACK

So, the couple came back. First, they did "Ilya Darling," the Broadway musical version of "Never on Sunday." Then, with Miss Mercouri in Hollywood for the move, "Gaily, Gaily," Dassin filmed "Up Tight."

It's probably the first American film from a major company—Paramount—to deal in basic terms with the current Negro unrest. It's a subject, like the Vietnam war, that Hollywood has shied from. But "Up Tight" deals with it directly, pitting the philosophes of black power and "freedom now" against the theory of nonviolence.

It started when Dassin's agent, Paul Rosen, asked him about doing a remake. "No," was the immediate reply. "Want to do a remake of 'The Informer'?"—the novel by Liam O'Flaherty, which John Ford made into a classic film in 1935.

"You're out of your head!" was the reply.

"Want to do a remake of 'The Informer'—in Harlem?" "Yes!"

But Harlem—where the Connecticut-born Dassin was raised and educated—didn't work out as the setting. Dassin said New York police wouldn't let him film after 11 p.m., citing an "antinoise law." The company went instead to Cleveland—"it's a more typical big U.S. city, anyway"—and did location shooting in the Negro Hough section, where racial rioting hit in the summer of 1966.

There were no serious problems there, though there were "moments of difficulty," Dassin recalled. He said you could still feel a tension; the residents still were "uptight," particularly the young.

"REAL ENOUGH"

"In the film, we're really trying to tell the country and the world what is in the heart of a black man in America today. And, in order to do this, we tried to view them as truly, as realistically, as we knew them, as we met them and as we've observed them from our own experience in life. And in the context of today, in the mood of today—and perhaps tomorrow. They're real enough."

The black man in "Up Tight" finds himself faced with two philosophies: nonviolence as a still worthwhile principle, or "forget it"—nonviolence was assassinated with Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. last April.

Dassin felt it essential to get black help in the film. He got actress Ruby Dee to help write it; her husband, Ossie Davis, was unavailable. And Julian Mayfield, primarily a writer and teacher, though he once did some theater acting, was talked into cowriting the script—and before he knew it, was starring in the film.

Mayfield plays a weak, alcoholic black who informs to police on a black militant friend. In the original "Informer," the Irish Republican Army is the black militant equivalent, with Victor MacLaglen in the film title role as Gypo Nolan, squealing on Wallace Ford.

"Up Tight" has basically an all-Negro cast, with Raymond St. Jacques, Frank Silvera and Roscoe Lee Browne in addition to Mayfield and Miss Dee.

Dassin finds an enormous change in Hollywood since he was there last. "A very good change. It is a much freer place. A filmmaker who cares enough can make the film he wants today, without interference. He couldn't before."

The change, he feels, came about mainly with the breakdown of the big studio system.

"I really think in the last few years there has been a strong liberating impulse in Hollywood. Guys making films have gotten a hold because they have fought for it—and they'll have to continue fighting for it. And they'll have to make good pictures."

"Today, if you care enough"—he stressed the "care"—"to make it 'like it is'—straight, direct, true, real—you can do it."

As he did in Europe for the last 20 years, Jules Dassin has made a film he cared enough about. He produced it, as he has every film he's made since "Rififi," he directed it, he helped write it.

"I hope it gives other guys a little nudge to do what they want to do," he said.

Next for Dassin is Romain Gary's "Promise at Dawn," and one of the things he wants to do eventually is a film on Greece, Greece today. With Melina, of course.

Carmen McRae Dips Into Pop, Both Fare Well

The Fraternity of Man (ABC ABCS-647, stereo).
The Abstracts (Pompeii SD 6002, stereo).

Carmen McRae is easing herself very gradually, carefully and tastefully into the wilds of Contemporary Music. The inclusion of "The Sounds of Silence" and "MacArthur Park" are the only evidence of modness here, and they are which gives him the opportunity to stretch it out and improvise a bit, thus fulfilling one of the functions of a jazz artist.

Selection of material is tasty, combining Charles classics — "I Got a Woman," "Geor-wonder is that I recall a Down Beat review of a Redding appearance out there in late summer or early autumn of 1967, just a few months before his death. In that review, the charge was made that Redding's act was just a slick commercial gimmick — one show exactly like the previous and next. Redding admitted he didn't change, and that his style was a bit hokey on stage, because that's what sells and where the money is is where it's at. Or something like that.

Redding's act was slick, but it must be emphasized it was good. And if you didn't follow him from city to city and hear it every night, what difference is there if it doesn't change much?

Of interest musically here are two numbers Otis wrote which others have had hit singles with — "Respect" by Aretha Franklin and "I Can't Turn You Loose," a current Chambers Brothers chart 45. Redding gave each his identifiable brand and added his personal touch to the Stone's "Satisfaction" for another highlight. Also present are "Mr. Pitiful," "These Arms of Mine," "Papa's Got a Brand New Bag" and "Any Ole Way."

An ever-improving and exciting duo, Sam and Dave have a hard core r&b album that is both typical of the form and unique to their individual talents. Often, the pair has been hampered by being better on stage than on record, but the title single here is their best "radio song" since "Hold On, I'm Coming." It gets the set off and swinging, and from then on the slate is carefully balanced between movers and ballads. Among the better tracks are "Everybody Got to Believe in Somebody" and "Wrap It Up."

As with Electric Flag, Mother Earth's best known member is a former musician with the Butterfield Blues Band. For Earth, it is Mark Naftalin, an organist-pianist who doesn't seem to play too important a position here. He doesn't author a single song, nor does he sing or play a solo. His name will assist prospective buyers get an idea of what Mother Earth is all about — modern blues with accomplished instrumentation and a woman, Tracy Nelson, as the main singer.

Tracy can sound like Janis Joplin on one track, "Mother Earth," then like Aretha Franklin, "Down So Low." Making what might be called special appearances on the former are Mike Bloomfield (who recorded under the name Makal Blumfeld) and Barry Goldberg, both of the Electric Flag, each of whom offer tuff solos.

Between the various official group members (seven strong), instrumentalists, Earthettes and other "friends" who lent their talents to the deluxe-package set, Mother Earth must be indebted to several dozen persons for this lp. And because it provides good listening, is professionally performed, strongly sung and attractively presented — despite being entirely derivative — we are indebted to Mother Earth for an outstanding debut album.

If Mother Earth borrows its ideas, Fraternity of Man must be said to be engaged in wholesale theft, although they would prefer to be known to be "influenced by" others. Whatever, Fraternity has an exceptional recording, with debts to r&b, jazz, country and (dah-dah) the Mothers. They do one Frank Zappa number, "Oh No I Don't Believe It," but even on their own "Field Day," the satire of the Mothers is evident.

Unfortunately, some of the vocals remind me of the Seeds having a slightly better night than they're capable of, but this is only occasionally. In all, side two emerges the more listenable, but with the Zappa number on side one, it is not a total waste.

The Abstracts are a quartet from Los Angeles who had some success with a single, "Smell of Incense," included here. The fellows do short (the longest is 3:02) numbers of a very commercial composition — i.e., very little experimentation, traditional vocal harmony and mostly forgettable stuff.

Aside from the single, the only piece that sticks in memory on one listening is George Gershwin's "Summertime." It begins in lackluster fashion, but has an interesting jazz waltz bridge which, if not challenging, was pleasant.

Under the Album Covers well buffeted by loving performances of "Stardust" and "Poor Butterfly," among other timeless standards, such as "I Got It Bad and That Ain't Good" and "Gloomy Sunday."

I was, frankly, afraid of hearing her "MacArthur Park," after the horrid hit version by Richard Harris. The lyrics are largely atrocious and the melody monotonous. However, Shorty Rogers (who arranged eight of the tunes, with the others done by Jimmy Jones) wisely eliminated the refrain and stuck to the bare worsifying, created an uptempo bridge and the result is very nice.

The title cut is all right, but there are new songs more suited to her special dramatic stylings. The abstracted viewpoint of the song seems too indefinite for her usually well-grounded emoting.

Elsewhere, the ballads receive her high quality, though traditional, stylings.

Herbie Mann, a skilled flutist who is among the best in jazz, has never been afraid to do commercial material, but for my taste too often he has turned good music into slushy listening. This album, however, is great listening, perhaps because he is doing Ray Charles material — and Charles is still one of my favorites.

Another thing Herbie changes in his recent recording approach is that he only does six numbers — about half his usual amount — gia on my Mind" — with lesser done works of Ray's — "Lonely Avenues," "Drown in My Own Tears."

Selections range in length from 4:41 to 7:53, which to me — for this kind of light jazz — is just about right.

As a bonus, a sensitive, attractive painting of Mann by Dimitrie Berea fills the cover. As usual, however, Atlantic won't tell us who accompanies Herbie. And to jazz fans, that's frustrating, and an insult.

If Aretha Franklin is the queen of soul in the U.S., as I suspect she is, she must also be considered a favorite in Europe. She recorded this album live at the Olympia Theater to a favorable audience and good (as in acclaim) reviews, and while the Parisians found her reprises of most Franklin hits just swell, for purposes of the lp, they lack the punch of the originals and really don't deserve a major push on an album.

This does not mean Aretha sings poorly (heaven forbid) on the set; it just means she, and Atlantic, overestimate her appeal here when they consider these rehashings significant. Watch this set have less lasting power on the charts.

The liner notes by Pete Johnson do not tell exactly when Otis Redding was recorded at the Whisky a Go Go in L.A., but I suspect it was later than the April 2, 1966 article by himself that Johnson quoted. The reason I Hot Diggity Dog, Yet!

BY JACK RUDOLPH

GERSHWIN

Rhapsody in Blue, An American In Paris. K. Perkins, piano, with the American Radio Symphony Orchestra, M. Brown conducting. Vox STPL 513.030.

Hot diggity dog!

Now there's an expression I haven't thought of in 30 years — but, then, I haven't heard Gershwin like this in 30 years.

Rudolph on Record

either. I don't know what the "American Radio Symphony" is, nor do K. Perkins and M. Brown ring any bells, but I'll bet they're a group of old time jazzmen, agile licorice stick, wah-wah trumpet and all.

The Rhapsody is beautifully played, avoiding the symphonic weight and ostentation of most modern versions yet respecting the virtues of the piece without being overwhelmed by them. This is jazz in the old time grand manner, the kind of playing that would bring a nod of beaming approval from old Pops White-man himself. "An American in Paris" never had the same deft touch and spirit and doesn't here but it gets a fine performance just the same. Sound is as brilliant and clean as the reading.

DANCES

Hungarian Dances Nos. 5 and 6 (Brahms), Sabre Dance (Khachaturian), Slavonic Dances Nos. 5 and 6 (Dvorak), Hungarian Rhapsody No. 2 (Liszt), Dances from "The Bartered Bride" (Smetana). Bregenz Festival Orchestra, Sandor Rekal, conducting.

I never heard of the Bregenz Festival Orchestra before (Bregenz is an Austrian town on the eastern shore of the Bodensee) nor are the jacket notes any help, but the spirit and lilt of these pieces point to a truly Slavic ensemble — at least Rekal knows what he's doing and the musicians follow through brilliantly. Played in ringing, smooth sound with just the right touch of schmalz, this is a delightful recording in every way.

MORE DANCES

Gypsy Fire! Four Slavonic Dances (Dvorak), Dances from "The Bartered Bride" (Smetana), Hungarian Dances 5 and 6 (Brahms), Rumanian Folk Dances (Bartok), Hungarian Rhapsody No. 1 (Enesco). Philharmonia Orchestra, Charles Mackerras conducting. Capitol SP 8690.

Since both this album and the preceding one cover much of the same ground they offer an intriguing comparison. Both are beautifully done, but the approach is somewhat different. The Philharmonia, being English, faces the music with a proper British front, less uninhibited than the Bregenz ensemble: consequently, the playing, while smooth and often delicate, is much more formal. By itself an excellent recording but lacking the verve of the Vox disc.

WAGNER

Siegfried Idyll, Venusberg Music from "Tannhauser." Overtures to "The Flying Dutchman" and "Rienzi." Vienna Symphony, Wolfgang Sawalisch conducting. Turnabout TV 34246.

Some very fine music making is contained in this album but it doesn't sound much like Wagner. The performances lack the sweep of most big symphonic recordings, such as we've become familiar with in recent years from the Philadelphia Orchestra, the Cleveland and the New York Philharmonic.

The more intimate touch is ideal for the "Siegfried Idyll," since it more closely approaches the small ensemble for which it was originally composed, but the same style doesn't work too well with the rest. There are exquisite passages in everything but they bog down before the finish, and the Venusberg Music is more frantic than anything else.

Problems of Making 'Che!'

BY WILLIAM WOLF

PONCE, PUERTO RICO — Is it too soon to make an objective film about the late revolutionary leader Che Guevara?

Actor Omar Sharif, who at first wanted no part of the project, is convinced the job can be done. Director Richard Fleischer, who cast Sharif as Guevara, is shooting the movie "Che!" with confidence that he can keep it truthful.

"We've had hundreds of letters from people who admired or hated Che," said Fleischer, who comes to the assignment with a background that includes "The Boston Strangler" and "Doctor Doolittle."

"Both sides say the picture shouldn't be made. But at least they should wait to see what we've done before judging it."

BOILING PASSIONS

With passions often at the boiling point concerning the man executed in Bolivia following the debacle of his attempted revolt, even choosing a location presented problems. Protest riots had to be considered a possibility. Puerto Rico was finally decided upon as a calm spot with scenery that could duplicate the Sierra Maestra mountains of Cuba. There were written protests from anti-Castro forces, and one picket line was organized, but the shooting has been uninterrupted.

"I just didn't want to get involved in political controversy," said Sharif in explaining why he at first refused the role in the 20th Century-Fox production. Sharif was made up to look closely like Che. He wore a beard, and had just finished shooting a scene with Jack Palance, who looked amazingly like Fidel Castro. They were working in muddy mountain terrain, two hours from the city of Ponce.

AFRAID OF "SLANT"

"I was afraid the film would be slanted anti-Guevara and anti-Castro," Sharif continued. "I didn't want to make a pro-Castro film either. That was my problem. But they convinced me it would be truthful, without editorializing."

"I admire the man very much personally. I think he was fantastic, but a total failure. The tragedy is that he was a Don Quixote fighting windmills. He knew he would fail. His death was his greatest success. He was martyred."

The actor said he was not having any problems acting the role, other than eliminating emotion from the character: "Che had no emotions, or at least didn't show it." Referring to his own background as a "Mediterranean type", the Egyptian-born performer smiled and said holding down on the emotion was particularly difficult.

FALSE NOSE

Palance, who required a false nose to build his resemblance to Castro, also has approached his role sympathetically. "From my part, it has to be sympathetic," he said between scenes. "I couldn't do it any other way. He is a man dedicated to his people."

Director Fleischer hopes to put the story in balance by the documentary approach of showing the characters through the eyes of others. Scenes will reflect the views of those who despised Guevara, and those who idolized him.

"They may all be right in a lot of cases," remarked the director. "He was a very complex man. We are trying to be objective. We're doing our best."

It often takes the perspective of time to arrive at an objective approach to an individual or issue of importance. When this problem was put to Fleischer, he replied:

"Now is when it is urgent. In a year from now I don't know what will happen, whether he'll be forgotten, or an even bigger legend. Right now he is more a myth than a man."

AREAS CONSIDERED

The film, budgeted at $6 million, has a script by Michael Wilson, based on research by producer Sy Bartlett. The Bolivian scenes were shot at the movie company's Century Ranch in Malibu, Calif. The Philippines and Mexico were both considered before it was decided to work in Puerto Rico.

"Why not Cuba?" someone in the production entourage asked facetiously, as if oblivious to the political problems.

"Because Castro didn't get the part," quipped a colleague.

LONDON (AP) — Classical actor Nicol Williamson is fed up with the stage but embarrassed by the money he makes as a movie star.

"The stage is so bloody boring, doing the same thing night after night," says Williamson, who starred in the Broadway production of "Inadmissible Evidence."

"I'll never take another stage role for more than three months, and that means I won't be able to work in New York again."

Now working on his fourth movie, Williamson is earning far more than he ever did in the theater. But the 30-year-old Scotsman is one Scot who doesn't care about money.

"The money doesn't interest me," he grins. "I have respect for it—it's a marvelous thing to spend but a horrible thing to think about."

He hasn't had many days off lately. While his last picture, "The Bofors Gun" was opening, Williamson was called in to replace Richard Burton in "Laughter in the Dark."

Junkyard Has Many Possibilities For 'Serious' Composer

BY CHRISTINE M. HANSON

DALLAS (AP) — A brake drum from an automobile offers noble possibilities as a musical instrument, according to Dr. Donald Erb, the Dallas Symphony Orchestra's resident composer this season.

Erb, 41, says discarded pieces of metal, plastics and glass provide highly musical sounds if they are tapped, clinked and rubbed together in just the right way.

"Any object you can strike with a stick can be a percussion instrument," Erb said. Incorporated into several of his chamber music pieces are the sounds of just such everyday objects: a policeman's whistle, a piece of steel pipe and various sizes of pop bottles.

Erb says a symphony in a junkyard will take place "at a place called Broadway Wrecking" when he gets back to Cleveland, Ohio, where he has spent most of his life. The piece of music he'll write will consist of a series of sounds produced in rhythmic sequence. Glass will shatter, a demolition ball will crash into piles of rubble, pipes will clank and bathtubs that are thumped will give off another bizarre sound.

ONE YEAR AT DALLAS

Erb came to Dallas at the invitation of Donald Johanos, conductor of the Dallas Symphony Orchestra, in August. During his one year of residence he is composing music, some of it to be premiered by the Dallas orchestra.

Dallas symphony-goers have a surprise in store for them when Erb's "Percussion Concerto" is presented, an event set for this weekend. His score calls for woodwind musicians to abandon their instruments and play only on their reeds, brass players merely to breathe through their horns and the pianist to reach into his piano and pluck the wires with his hands or hit them with a mallet.

Also to be presented this season is a piece called "Christmasmusic" and the premiere in April of Erb's latest full orchestral composition.

The April premiere will probably incorporate electronic sound on pre-recorded tape, coordinated with the orchestral arrangement.

ELECTRONIC INFLUENCE

"I don't think there's any doubt in my mind that music is going to be influenced by electronics," the resident composer said. One of the trend-setters in music today is "music that will amalgamate itself with electronic sound."

Erb predicts that, "The composer of the future is going to be as versed in electronics as he is in music as we know it.

"The young artist of the future is going to feel at home with electronics," said Erb, whose face crinkled in pleasure as he thought of it. His sandy hair snuggled up to the collar of his sport coat, patched at the sleeves and, like his trousers, slightly wrinkled. His bushy eyebrows worked up and down as he explained his ideas.

And his smile seemed to stretch all the way to his sideburns as he offered more predictions about the future of music.

"The orchestra player of the future may well be sitting at a control panel, or rather than playing a violin, he's going to be playing an instrument that hasn't been invented yet."

TODAY'S MUSIC TO CEASE

"Music as we know it today is going to cease to exist," he added. "I think the functions of things are going to change. Symphonies are still going to be performing orchestral repertoire," but the way music will be performed will take on new forms.

Besides three major orchestral compositions, Erb has written several pieces of chamber music, including some protest music. "I call them my hate cantatas," he said, his eyebrows working again. He referred to them as pieces about ideas he considers "socially relevant."

Erb received his undergraduate training in music from Kent State University in Ohio, then went on to earn his master's in 1953 from the Cleveland Institute and his doctorate from Indiana University in 1964.

He said he first became interested in music through his aunt, a schoolteacher who taught him how to play the trumpet. Erb "took to it," and later started playing the piano and arranging pop tunes during high school.

Then in 1956 he started composing music seriously and he's been at it ever since, tapping, thumping and occasionally foraging around in junkyards.

class underdog who shoves his way from the slums to the top of London business society. He fights the lingering British class war in bedroom scenes along the way.

"Sex isn't much of a problem in British films, but it still is in America," says Williamson.

"But the way things are changing, you'll be able to show anything you want on the screen in 15 years."

Relaxing between scenes at a country inn near Queen Elizabeth II's Windsor Castle, Williamson talked about the differences between the stage and pictures.

"The exciting moments in the theater come in rehearsals where you make discoveries about the character you're playing. Making a film is like rehearsing for the theater—you keep making these discoveries as you go along and every day there is something new.

"On the stage," says Williamson, who has played in everything from Shakespeare to T. S. Eliot, "I keep changing the performance every night but it's not the same.

SCREAMING "QUIET"

"You have to keep pounding your voice out and when you're supposed to be doing a quiet dinner scene you're actually screaming your head off. The camera gets in closer and sees more."

Williamson would like to operate his own theater company "with an open stage to get closer to the audience. The play should involve them—but not like in some of these experimental things with the audience singing or jumping on the stage and beating a guitar while they sell ice cream in the crowd.

"The stage belongs to the actors and we should keep it that way."

Ratings Indicate Specials Are Favorites of TV Audience

BY DARWIN DEBASKER

There is no doubt that I am the worst resolution keeper in captivity, so it would be foolish to make any grand statements of intention, but as a commentator on entertainment, I feel no embarrassment at expressing hopes that

CBS was dismayed by the slip of "The Doris Day Show," which began strongly and gradually has slid to 57th position. Also weak was the "CBS Friday Night Movie" with its worst week of the season. The normally strong others will do better in 1969 than in '68.

Specifically, for the 10th consecutive season, I hope that the three networks will exercise better judgment in the selection of series. Since 1965, viewers have rejected a disproportionate share of each new season, and the old shows — such as Lucy Ball's, "Bonanza," "Beverly Hillbillies," "Jackie Gleason," etc. — continue to roll along. Perhaps it is time that tv execs realize that they're going to have to come up with something new. During the course of the year, I will offer ideas on guidelines the three major nets might consider.

Although it is dated by now, the Nielsen ratings for the week of Dec. 2-8 disclosed how unhappy viewers are with the same old stuff — or at least how eager they are to try anything "special." For instance, in the top six shows were four specials: "Elvis" (1), "Charlie Brown's Christmas" (3), "G.E. Fantasy Hour" (4) and "National Geographic Special" (6). The first three listed specials were NBC shows, which helped the network open its widest rating lead of the season, over CBS of course. Averages were 21.4 for NBC, 19.3 for CBS and a lowly 15.7 for poor ABC. The numbers themselves may mean nothing to readers, but I can assure you it is a large lead, and that ABC is way down.

So far, through the above rating period, NBC has won seven of 10 battles, with CBS getting the other three. ABC has not been close.

Specials aside, however, night only had a 22 share of the audience, which compared to the 40s gathered by top shows was pitiful indeed, especially considering that "The Defector" (on the Friday night movie) was supposed to be a major attraction — or so CBS hoped. It was actually poor.

Network movies were down all over the schedule, with not one making the top 20. Quite a change from the days of two seasons ago when several were in the top 10 each week.

The breakup of top rock groups continued in epidemic proportions. Last year, which saw the split of the Cream and Big Brother and the Holding Company, added Traffic to the list of casualties. Leader Stevie Winwood, who got his first fame as lead singer of the Spencer Davis Group and later formed Traffic, explained, "We feel that today's scene is moving very much away from permanent groups and more towards recognition for individual musicians. It's becoming more like the jazz scene, with artists free to jam together as they please, without feeling obligated or restricted by a group's identity." In other words, Traffic couldn't agree on what kind of music to perform.

Winwood will record a solo lp in the near future.

Other groups which have either broken up, gone into hiatus or had major overhauls, include Buffalo Springfield, Lovin' Spoonful, Byrds, Animals and Mamas and Papas.

Two weeks ago, the original

Animals gave a concert at Newcastle. It marked the final appearance of singer Eric Burdon, who is giving up singing to concentrate on films. He will live in Hollywood. It's just as well. Eric, a very good rock-blues singer, ran out of composing ideas almost before he began, and his last several albums were embarrassing. I will prefer to remember him as the man who sang "House of the Rising Sun," "It's My Life" and several other early goodies.

Twenty-seven sessions of three hours each were used by Simon and Garfunkel in a Nashville studio recently, which established a local record. Ironically, it was not to record an album — just a single.

Though Admittedly Unfashionable, Sheinwold Makes Resolutions

BY ALFRED SHEINWOLD

It may be unfashionable to suggest New Year's resolutions but tradition counts with bridge players. If you think anything at all can improve your game, lift your right hand as you read the next few paragraphs:

1 — I will try to enjoy playing bridge. I will even try to smile more often than I frown.

2 — I will treat my partner as though he were a human being, even if this frightens him.

3 — I will make all my bids, passes and doubles in the same tone of voice.

4 — I will play all cards with the same lack of emphasis and without undue haste or hesitation.

5 — When playing high in second or third position I will refrain from saying "Not through the Iron Duke."

6 — When overruffing, I will refrain from saying "Never send a boy to do a man's work."

7 — I will not gloat when I win.

8 — I will not whine when I lose.

9 — When sitting out, I will be a silent kibitzer.

10 — I will keep these resolutions for at least a week.

The resolution to play your cards without emphasis, haste or hesitation applies chiefly when you are a defender. Any mannerism would give your partner information he is not entitled to receive.

As declarer you have no partner to inform, and you are free to play as you like, except that you must not try to deceive an opponent by your manner of playing a card. You must flimflam him by the card you play rather than your manner of playing it, as in today's hand.

West opened the deuce of hearts, and East tried a finesse with the ten. Since East couldn't tell that his side had four tricks in top cards, it seemed more reasonable for that hornswoggled West: it was the fact that South had led the ten of spades. A creature of habit, West was switched to diamonds. East used to playing low quickly when a ten was led in this situation.

The ten of spades held the trick, of course, and South him to play his partner for the queen of hearts than for the ace of spades.

South won the first trick with the queen of hearts and had no trouble seeing that the opponents could take four easy tricks. The only hope was to get rid of a heart on dummy's fourth diamond, but this was unlikely to work unless South could draw a round of trumps before starting the diamonds.

South's best chance was to lead the ten of spades. When South did so, West played a low trump in the naive hope that South was missing both the ace and the queen of trumps and would let the ten ride for a losing finesse.

It wasn't South's manner was out of trumps, and West had to follow suit, so that South safely got rid of his losing heart on dummy's fourth diamond. He could then cheerfully give up one trump and two clubs, making his game contract.

South kept his resolution against gloating by saying nothing and keeping all expression off his face. East thought of saying a bitter word of reproach but remembered his own resolution and changed his comment to "I really think you're playing the best you know how."

And, would you believe it, West was really not pleased with this gentle tribute to his skill!

Much of Decatur's life reads like something from a Horatio Hornblower epic. Son of a merchant captain, he took his first long sea voyage at the age of eight. A midshipman at 19, a lieutenant at 20 and a Navy captain at 25, Stephen Decatur was made a commodore in his 34th year. When U.S. Marines clobbered the Barbary pirates' stronghold in the Mediterranean in 1805, thus inspiring the "shores of Tripoli" part of their Marine Hymn written a few decades later, they were partly in the shadow of this Navy hero. The previous year, Decatur had pulled off a daring exploit which earned the praise of England's Admiral Nelson. Nelson called Decatur's feat

'Jeannie' Barely Survives

BY CYNTHIA LOWRY

NEW YORK (AP) — Barbara Eden, the lissome blonde who has parlayed a situation comedy role as a 2,500-year-old genie into a blooming variety sideline, once lost a plum night club engagement because her bottle was too big.

As most youngsters and a large segment of the nation's adult girl-watchers know, Jeannie the genie inhabits the Orientally-furnished innards of a glass artifact—a bottle, in modern language—in a giddy bit of NBC-TV fluff called "I Dream of Jeannie."

In a night club act in Las Vegas, to display her singing and dancing talents, the gimmick was to have her emerge and disappear dramatically from a king-sized facsimile of the TV show's bottle. It worked in Vegas, but when it came time to install the background in one of New York's classier night spots, the Persian Room at the Plaza, it was discovered that Miss Eden's bottle was too big to move onto the stage and there was no time to make a new one.

Her booking was cancelled. Miss Eden, while dashed by the bad luck, took it philosophically.

QUE, SERA, SERA

"I keep pretty busy with the show and with variety show guesting—it will give me a little more time at home with Matthew," she said.

Matthew is her 3-year-old son, the subject of constant comment by the actress and her actor-director husband, Michael Ansara. The boy might be called a bottle baby since his arrival in the summer of 1965 coincided awkwardly with the birth of the TV series.

"We had to start shooting early that year so we could take a long break during the summer when I couldn't work before the cameras," Miss

Television

Eden said. "Genie costumes are difficult if you are trying to conceal anything."

Matthew, however, arrived promptly on cue and "I Dream of Jeannie" was launched the next month.

The series is one of those made-to-order fantasy comedies with a number of built-in audience lures: the genie's magic for the small fry, Miss Eden's visible charms for the gentlemen, and handsome Larry Hagman, playing a pretty dopey astronaut, for the young women.

NEVER A HIT

It has never really been a hit, and has been put in different time spots of NBC's schedule each season. Rumors of its demise have circulated a couple of times a year—until this season.

In fact, the prognosis for the show's continuance have been so dismal that Hagman has used some of his free time to work in a pilot show for a projected series, and Miss Eden has been busily making the rounds of the assorted variety shows.

"The variety thing started about two years ago," she recalled, "with a guest shot on Dom De Luise's special. Then others came—Andy Williams, Jonny Winters and then along came 'Kismet,' which seemed like logical type-casting."

Since then Miss Eden has been singing and dancing on shows ranging from Bob Hope's comedy hours to "Laugh-In."

It would appear from her activity that Miss Eden's goal would be variety. She started a show-business career at age 14 in her home town of San Francisco by filling in for an ailing vocalist for a band. At 17 she was singing regularly with San Francisco bands, and later studied voice.

ACTRESS GOAL

"I really have always wanted to be an actress," she said. "I studied drama, and when I came to Hollywood, that was what I wanted. It's strange that I seem to move in cycles that now have gotten me back to the singing and dancing thing."

She was employed days in a bank and spending evenings working with little theater companies when an agent saw her and signed her to a studio contract.

"I started with Fox," she said, "and for the next couple of years—1959 and 1960—they kept casting me in giggly, dumb, girl-next-door parts—awfully good but terribly ingenuous. Then, finally, I was getting into some light comedy parts and along came 'The New Interns,' and that brought me a bunch of sterile parts. I was everybody's girl friend.

"After 'The Seven Faces of Dr. Lao' there were no more sexy blonde parts. I was the dark-haired, no make up, frigid type. Actually, when 'Jeannie' came along, I wasn't too eager because it seemed like something I'd gone through before."

The series took off to its usual slow start early this fall, but has moved up on the Nielsen list into a safe, respectable spot, usually landing in the top 40 shows—and if that holds, it is a safe bet for renewal for a fourth season.

If so, Miss Eden's plans for a dramatic career will be slightly postponed.

Nudity Abounds, But Traditional Fare London Successes

LONDON (AP) — At the Royal Court Theater, Billy the Kid snarls obscenities at Jean Harlow.

At the Duke of York's a homosexual has a baby.

At the Comedy, four young men stage a scene so nude that one actor's mother flew all the way from Canada to tell her son to put his pants on.

At the Ambiance, lunchtime audiences see an entire play performed in bed. And at the Shaftesbury, men and women leap naked from beneath a blanket.

Censorship was abolished from the London stage last September, and the curtain already has risen on at least half a dozen plays that would have been sliced up by the Lord Chamberlain's blue pencil.

Does the new freedom mean a pornographic revolution in London?

"I don't think so," says one agent. "There is no great rush to see a dirty play—none of them are doing very good business."

"Clearly no purveyor of filth is making a fortune," says Sunday Times critic Alan Brien. Some of the post-censorship plays have already closed for lack of trade despite sensational publicity.

SIX WEEKS

"Fortune and Men's Eyes"—the one with the male nude scene—lasted six weeks.

"I have lost 5,000 pounds ($12,000) on the six-week run," says impresario Larry Barnes. "I'm going back to staging family entertainment."

Most of the new plays, such as "Hair" or "The Beard," are American. Most have been dismissed by the critics as boring, amateurish, sad, pessimistic or grotesque.

"It is difficult to imagine anyone emerging muttering 'hot stuff' or 'let's go to my place and have an orgy,'" Brien writes.

Commentators agree that once the novelty has worn off, the so-called "dirty plays" will have to offer something more if they are to survive.

But with or without sex, London's 40-odd theaters in the West End are enjoying a boom. With so much happening on so many stages, it's easy to forget that the pseudo-pornographic plays even exist.

Shakespeare still packs them in at the Old Vic and the Aldwych.

"Hadrian VII," an unlikely hit about a fictitious pope, has been standing-room-only since it opened last winter. Musicals like "Fiddler on the Roof" are thriving, and Agatha Christie's "Mousetrap" just started its 17th year at the Ambassador.

THEATER CENTER

"London is the center of the English-speaking theater at the moment," according to publicist Theo Cowan and most others in the business.

Cowan estimates that about five plays are lined up and waiting to get into every theater in the West End.

One reason for the healthy state of drama here is that with lower costs in Britain, a play can be financed for as little as $14,400. An ambitious musical might run to $352,000 to stage.

This is small money compared to New York, where "Her First Roman" collected half a million dollars in advance bookings but had to close after four performances.

Actors, even big name ones, are also prepared to work for less in London. One authority estimates that Paul Scofield, internationally famous since the movie, "A Man for All Seasons," earns perhaps $1,200 a week for playing in "Hotel in Amsterdam." He could get 10 times that for a screen role.

"Albert Finney might be willing to take a stage role for 60 pounds ($144) a week if he liked it," says an agent, speaking of the respect given by British actors in general for the theater. "For a film he'd get 10,000 pounds ($24,000) a week for the same job."

PROVINCIAL, TOO

And the English theater isn't confined to London. Provincial cities have healthy stage networks of their own, ambitious if less well-known than the Royal Shakespeare Company at Stratford-on-Avon.

"Everyone in Britain studies Shakespeare in school," says Cowan, "and for an actor here, a good Shakespearean role is like a university degree. You can still make a name for yourself with one good performance of Hamlet."

The Royal Shakespeare Company, like the National Theater at the Old Vic, is subsidized by the government. Numerous other ventures receive grants from various sources such as the Arts Council.

To spread playgoing interest among children, an organization called the Theater Center has seven complete drama companies. These tour schools throughout the country, playing to more than 500,000 youngsters a year. Supported by grants and private finance, the venture is a noncommercial project that doesn't particularly aim at developing future boxoffice customers. It tries to develop the children's own creative talents.

Experimental theaters in London such as the Roundhouse, a converted locomotive shed, rarely make money but they serve as seed-growing grounds for new talent. Occasionally they send a show to the West End.

Nor do plays here depend as heavily on good press notices as they do in New York.

A musical called "Charlie Girl" got only one good review when it opened. It's been running for three years. A musical version of the "Canterbury Tales" got a tepid reception last winter but it's been a smash hit ever since.

Not all successes fare so well, though. "Cabaret" and "Man of La Mancha," both major American musicals, were applauded when they opened, but both have posted closing notices after less than a year. "Beggars Opera" was hailed at the Edinburgh Festival and flopped in London.

With seats priced at about 75 cents to a top of about $4.80, London is the place to be a playgoer. You can see Sir Laurence Olivier or Sir Alec Guinness almost any night of the week for less than the cost of a downtown movie.
